Published Semi-Monthly.

128 Pages.]

[Complete.

BEADLE'S

No. 11.

The Choicest Works of the Most Popular Authors.

THE

PRISONER OF LAVINTRESSE;

OR.

THE FORTUNES OF A CUBAN HEIRESS.

BY MRS. M. A. DENISON.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, 141 WILLIAM ST.

Ross & Tousey, General Agents.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1560, by BEADLEAND COMPANY, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New-York.

BILL BIDDON, TRAPPER;

OR,

LIFE IN THE NORTH-WEST.

BY EDWARD S. ELLIS.

AUTHOR OF "SETH JONES."

A romance of exceeding interest, beauty, and life-like delineation of the life of hunters and trappers in that vast region surrounding the head waters of the Yellow-stone, and stretching away on the Red River trail. Through it runs the thread of a sweet love-story, and the excitement of the rescue of a beautiful white captive from the Blackfect-Sioux Indians. It is one of the "stories of a year."

Special Announcement.

The publishers of the DIME NOVELS have the pleasure of announcing a special engagement with Edward S. Ellis, Esq., the author of "Seth Jones," by which he will devote his best labors exclusively to their service, and will write for no other publishers whatever. A series of Splendid Romances of Frontier, Indian, and Trapper's life have been arranged for, to appear as follows, viz.: December 1st, "Bill Biddon, Trapper; or, Life in the North-West;" January 15th, "The Frontier Angel: A Romance of Kentucky Ranger's Life;" and others to issue March 1st, May 1st, July 15th, and October 1st of the ensuing year. The resources of our early history, of our frontier settlements and experiences, of Indian life and character, offer a field of inexhaustible richness to the writer whose knowledge of that field is accurate and thorough, and whose talent is especially adapted for that exciting yet historical narrative. Such writers,—at whose head must be placed Cooper,—are very rare. Mr. Ellis is one of them.

The appearance of "Seth Jones" marked the advent of a brilliant and charming writer in the almost untrodden field. Such a success has rarely been witnessed in the history of our literature. Everybody heard of it, talked of it, and read it, and everybody was thoroughly satisfied with its unique interest, humor, and happy characterisations. A new mine has been opened; and, to render it exclusively available to the readers of this series of national and American romances, the engagement above referred to has been made.

BEADLE & CO., Publishers, 141 William St., New York.

PRISONER OF LA VINTRESSE;

OR,

THE FORTUNES OF A CUBAN HEIRESS.

.. OT DESIGNATION ..

BY MRS. MARY A. DENISON.

IRWIN P. BEADLE AND COMPANY.

141 WILLIAM St., CORNER OF FULTON.

IRWIN P. BEADLE & CO., in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

THE

PRISONER OF LA VINTRESSE;

OR,

THE FORTUNES OF A CUBAN HEIRESS.

CHAPTER I.

ESCAPE AND DISAPPOINTMENT.

The moonlight streamed broadly down upon the "Paseo De Ysabel Segunda"—the grand avenue of the city of Havana. Its two carriage-drives—its two walls for foot-passengers, glittered like silver in the splendors of the night; and the tree-branches that lined its sides were white with the glory of the full-orbed moon. The soft air was loaded with the scents of flowers that came from near and distant gardens. The blue field of stars glittered above, and the soft harmony of a full band of music, playing perhaps before the Governor's house, their farewell march, came gently on the night-wind.

Two figures lightly but hurriedly crossed the lower end of the beautiful avenue.

"We did well with the guards, Minerva, now we have passed all danger, and I shall soon put you on board—good heavens!"

The lady looked up hastily at this exclamation.

"Do you not see, Minerva, in the hurry and excitement, I have quite forgotten my portmanteau, containing all my papers—my drafts. In fact, I could not go without it. How unfortunate!"

"What will you do, dear Herman?" It was the musical voice of a young girl.

"There is but one thing I can do: put you on board and come back for it, then hasten to the ship, I don't think the tide is up. The boat that carries you will return with me, and it will not take thirty minutes. I must feel that you are safe."

"O Herman! it seems as if I dare not stay alone, and I am so fearful there may be trouble about your returning;" she said, half tearfully.

"Don't be afraid, dearest—the captain of the Eagle is a thorough gentleman, and I am well known here by most of the public authorities. Come, yonder is the boat, they are punctual—don't tremble so, my love."

"I fear-I hardly know what;" was the low reply.

"It is but natural;" returned the manly voice, "but you will soon feel safer when I am your protector. Here they are."

A boat approached the landing, propelled by two swarthy seamen.

"If I could only remain here till you return;" she murmured again.

"That would never do, Minerva. I'll see you to the vessel's side, however. What time do you set sail, men?"

"At twelve, to a second;" said one of the men.

"All right—I have an hour, then." Herman had pulled out his gold repeater—now he hastily put it back, secured Minerva in a comfortable seat, protecting her with lover-like energy against the up-coming of the restless waters as the sailors pulled oars lustily.

They reached the side of the black bulk. The captain's cheerful voice was heard.

"You are in good time, Mr. Goreham."

"Yes, sir; but I must ask the favor to be pulled back and waited for just ten minutes. By an unfortunate oversight I've left all my valuables, and this young lady, my cousin, of whom I spoke to you, will remain in your safe keeping."

"Ay, ay," responded the captain, "but I must limit you. Thirty minutes is the very longest I can spare the men, as I wish to set sail at twelve. Think you can do it?"

"I shan't be so long as that, captain, thank you. Now, be patient, darling," he whispered to the young girl as he helped her up the side.

Another moment and the sailors were off, Mr. Herman Goreham keeping them company, while Minerva was conducted to the handsome cabin, and shown her own pretty stateroom, by the stewardess.

Here she dismissed the woman and sat down, listening intently that she might catch the faintest flash of the oars on their quick return. Strangely enough, a drowsiness crept over her, and, giving way to the sudden languor, she fell asleep. When she awoke, a midnight darkness was around her, and for a moment she knew not where she was. A sullen sound and uneasy motion convinced her all at once that the vessel was under way, and had been perhaps for hours. A blank horror seized her-could she be alone? The clattering of the doors, the trembling of the ship, convinced her that she must be at sea, and in a high wind. She tried the door of her stateroom, standing up as best she could. A sudden lurch sent her out into the cabin where she caught at the long table and strove to steady herself, that she might look about her. There was no sign of life there. The lantern swung dismally, and the bolts and casings creaked and groaned. Overhead were sounds of tramping feet and shouting voices. Totally unacquainted with a ship as she was, she gazed from end to end of the long cabin in utter dismay. Of course Herman was on board. He had come at the appointed time, supposed her asleep and would not disturb her. Which of the state-rooms, whose gilding looked so ghastly in the dim light, could be his? And yet he might just have knocked at her door. Perhaps he did; she must have slept very soundly not to hear. A feeling of desolation came over her in spite of her hope, that sent the tears gushing to her eyes. If she could only see one human face—if the captain could come in, or the stewardess. But this horrible rolling-this deathly faintness that now crept over her, shrouding as it were, soul and body in its hideous mantle. At any rate, she must get back to her state-room, and there listen for the captain. It could not be very long till morning if the vessel started at twelve, and she had probably slept some hours. The damp sea-wind chilled her, and an undefinable fear weighed down her spirits. She returned to her stateroom and sank uneasily on her narrow bed. Ill as she felt herself growing, she did not call for assistance, but waited patiently. It was evident that the calm wind of the previous night had freshened into a gale. The ship leaped and plunged, and the ominous clattering as of ten thousand dishes, became every moment louder, while the shouts above, grew more hoarse and continuous.

Sad was that weary watching till the dawn, and welcome the first gray streak that slanted across the little state-room. Minerva attempted in vain to rise. The fearful giddiness of sea-sickness was upon her—the ominous sinking and depression that makes the malady seem tenfold more terrible. The gale had somewhat abated its violence—but the ship yet plunged from one large wave-top to the other.

Perplexing herself with wearying thought, she yet looked for some token from Herman. He might be as ill in his state-room as she was in hers, but surely he could send a message by the stewardess, or if there were other passengers, of which she was doubtful, by them or the captain.

The savory smell of coffee saluted her senses. Breakfast was being prepared, then; some one might think of her. She was not mistaken. In a few moments the door of her stateroom opened, and the pleasant face of the stewardess appeared, shining through the steam of the beverage she held in her hand.

Minerva greeted her with a smile.

It was good to see a human countenance, even that of a stranger.

"How are you, miss?" the girl asked simply.

Minerva shook her head; her look was expressive.

"Ah, you are not used to the sea," said the girl—"get all right in good time. Take some strong coffee, that will make you better. Very pretty;" she added, nodding her head approvingly, as Minerva shook the long curling hair that had fallen from its fastenings, and hung in glittering curls all over the pillow.

The young girl smiled languidly and tasted the coffee. It gave her strength, for she lifted herself in the narrow bed, and her eyes grew brighter.

"The gentleman who came with me," she said, turning to the stewardess, who, with an admirable sea-gait, was placing the little state-room in order—"is he ill, do you think, this morning? He said he was never sick at son, but then we have had a terrible storm, have we not?"

"Very bad," replied the girl, who, though she was Spanish by Lirth, spoke excellent Hughsh; "but who do you mean, by the gentlemen? You came alone; I saw no gentleman."

"Yes, I came over the vessel's side alone," said Minerva, "but my cousin was in the boat. He had to go lack to the shore after some luggage he had forgotten, but he returned directly. If I had my pencil, I would write a message to him, and the steward could take it. It is strange that I have not heard from him before now."

The stewardess stood regarding the young girl with a glance of perplexity.

"Are you sure he came aboard?" she asked after a moment of silence.

Minerva trembled at her look—her heart gave a great bound as she spoke.

"Sure, of course; he was to sail this voyage with me; his trunks are on board. Why do you ask such a question?" she cried almost willly. "Were you by when the heat came back?"

"No, not exactly;" sail the stew r less; "but I was up in the cabin till long after the ship sailed, and I did see no car; but don't you be so pale and fright not, mis; I can very soon find out for you—the captain can tell. He misht poly layer stail ont, you see, to watch the ship getting under way; sometimes car passengers do, in particular the first night. Do not be affaild—I will go see directly. What name ber is his state-room?"

"Seventeen;" said Minerva, faintly, sinking back on her pilllow, for the bare thought of such a trouble sont all the block to her heart and made her sick with apprehension.

Meanwhile, Band In, the stewards s, mode her way to the state room designated by Min rva. It was boked—phinly the equation or the per maybe help seem to it, was in percension of the hey. She tild it, each determ hit he heyelds, and managed to peak in under the Philips that make the upper half of the door. There was not only there, that was very evident.

The captain came in, wet with salt-spray, pale and engrossed. He had been hard at work since the gide sprangup. Bandola went towards him; she was a great favorite with him.

"Well, Banda, we're about through," he said. "Did the storm frighten you? We had a fine taste of a tropical harricane—one of the worst I ever saw. What?" he queried sharply, not hearing what reply the stewardess made.

"That young man, sir, who came with the young laly; is he anywhere on board?"

"Young man—on board—why of course he is," replied the captain. "You mean Goreham—in his state-room, likely."

"Oh! no, captain, I have looked."

"And what business have you to be looking after young men?" he asked, jocosely.

"Why, she, the young lady, sir, feels very had about it. She wanted me to, and I saw him not in the callin, at all, last night."

"The dickens!" said the captain, with energy. "Caulkings," he continued, turning to the first mate, who had come in to his breakfast, "is Goreham on board?"

"No, sir;" said the man.

. "What! not on board? What do you mean, sir?"

"The men staid nearly fifteen minutes after their time, against orders, sir," replied the mate, "and came lack with at him. You had turned in, and, you remember, given charge on no account to be disturbed. I felt a little unvesy when they came back and nobody with them, but expected every moment to see him alongside in some other boat, as he might very easily have done. Afterwards, in the harry and confusion of getting off, it did not occur to my mind, sir."

"Well, well," muttered the captain, his brow clothing; "this is an unfortunate thing; a mighty unfortunate thing. Here we have this young hely on our hands, and the per thing will be in a pretty mess. Shell fret here if the oth, and who can wonder? There's certainly a mystery at this Did he mean to stay?" he asked abruptly, as if quantity himself. "No—Goreham's the soul of honor—at has Hall we always found him so. Well, well, this is a protypically to be sure. Bandola, go to the hady and do what yet can to comfort her. Say that he was probably detained for some tritling thing by some of those confounded custom-house people. It's very unfortunate, I'm sure, but it can't be helped, so I'll take breakfast."

But the worthy captain's spirits were low, that was easily to be seen. He ate and drank in silence, scarcely speaking to his companion.

CHAPTER II.

SAD NEWS.

Bandora went back to the state-room, with a slow step. Minerva had managed to rise, and had nearly complete I har toilet. She looked very pale, and her large, dark eyes were supernaturally bright with excitement and expectation. She fully expected to see Herman, as the little door opened. A slight flash mantled her check—a smile broke over her free. It was changed to a sudden look of disappointment—and there again to an expression of vague terror, it is there was that in the kind face of the stewardess that made her heart sink.

"What! has he not come!" she asked.

"Lady-" the girl stopped there-not knowing how to communicate the rest.

"It can not be that he is not on board!" cried Minerva, growing every moment paler.

"He will come in another ship;" said Bandola, catching at the vinetigrette that laid on the pillow; "den't faint, hely; I'm sure he will come; he will take a vessel this very day; it will sail maybe, quicker than this; you will meet him there, perhaps in New York."

"No-no-you can never know what reas as I have is four-what terrible reasons;" the poer young girl alms:

gasped.

"But you will see him; you will e-rtainly so him;" said the stewardess, the tears coming to her eyes. "Don't take on so, or you will be sick, and that will spill your bounty;" she added, in the hope that an appeal to her we hand's impulse might be successful.

"Oh! I am unfortunate;" wailed the pargirl—"they know that I have gone; they will wayley him; they will kill him; I shall never, never see him again. Is there no may for me to get back?—no way?—no returning ship? Oh, in marcy ask the captain; tell him I will pay him any price—and yet—it would be madness to return. Oh! why was I born to be the sport of fortune?"

All this time the stewardess was looking on pityingly, but wondering.

"Dear young lady," she said again, in her soft, soothing voice; "it can't be helped; don't weep so-you will be very ill."

"I think the captain is to blame; it was cruel, cruel in him not to send the men back; I will never forgive him, never!" she cried, the Spanish blood mantling her cheeks—her large eyes flashing anger. "Was it a conspiracy? Is your captain a gentleman? an honest man?"

"What! Captain Wyllies? I will hear no word against him," cried the stewardess, almost angrily; "you have no right to blame him. He was worn out, and had to sleep, everybody was busy—they thought he would come in another boat, and it was all unfortunate and unhappy, but not on purpose. No one thought of such a thing. I am sorry for you, but you must say nothing against Captain Wyllies, because he is a good man. He would not do wrong for the whole world."

At that moment, the captain himself appeared. He looke l quite pale and troubled.

"My dear young lady," he said, "this is very unfortunate; I assure you, I would give a great deal, if I were back in the harbor of Havana, this minute."

His frank, honest face, and real concern of manner, banished any lurking suspicion that had troubled her mind before.

"O captain! I can hardly think how to do or act," she sail, her hands working over each other uneasily, her lips quivering.

"I think, under the circumstances, you had better let thin, stake their course," he replied. "There is no way for you to return, unless I chance to speak a vessel bound to Cuba, and that is extremely improbable. If I do, however, and you should desire it, I will place you on board. Very likely, Mr. Goreham was detained by some of the custom-house officers, who had, or thought they had, some other formalities to go through with, and he will take the first vessel bound for home, so it will only make the difference of a few days, parhaps even hours. I advise you to look up a the bright sile, and be as cheerful as you can about it, every thing will comout right. There were several vessels really to sail to-by, and be assured, he will take one of them. His accledy will be almost equal to your own."

"Oh, but he knows where I am," said Minerya, ple wely.

"And for that reason, his mind will be so much the easier."

"While I am deplorably in the dark, with reference to his fate," she added, the tears falling.

"I'll trust Goreham," said the captain, cheerily; "he's a wonderfully keen young fellow, and not one of the sort to get into scrapes. Don't you worry, we shall have a splenill run, always do, with a storm at the outset; and in a week, trust me, you will meet in the good city of Manhattan."

"But-but-he has enemies," sobbed the young girl brokenly.

A dim suspicion of the truth, forced its way into the mind of Captain Wyllies.

This girl, though attired in thorough American costume, needed only the vail, the coquettish fan, the rich fall sills and mantle of the Cubans, to transform her into a Spanish we man. Hers were the wonderful eyes of that rare, the rich, black, luxuriant hair, the clear, olive complexion, a shale lighter, perhaps, than the general line. The consinship was, aller all, a ruse, the two were flying perhaps from jedous rivals, this was the mystery. If so, there was certainly god care for the girl's alarm. Those Spanish haters strike quick and deep, and thy justice. His pity grew, as the sel care in a cir the whole affair flashed across him. Perlage, the per Call was married, if so, and if harm had befallen him, a sad propect stretched before her. Helples and dellate, sha so had entirely unfitted for sorrow, or for labor. The thought, of course were his own, and rapid as II daning. They did not show on the surface, in troubled glances. On the Chirary, the captain consoled her so much the more, as his own har s fell. He assured her that he could look out for her contiert, and interest himself in her future fortunes. Bandola, he we ald relinquish to her. "She is a good girl," he said, "a production of mine, and I'm going to educate her. She is not ign rant, now," he added, laying his hand lightly on her head, "so she may be some company for you. Cheer uu, young lady, 1 prophesy a renewal of your happiness, on your return. I feel almost certain that young Gorcham will meet you there."

Unconsciously, the happy, earnest manner of the captain, infised new hope into the sorrowful heart of Minerva, and, though she could not quite divest herself of her melancholy forebolings, yet she did not allow hereelf to give way to them.

•

CHAPTER III.

THE GENERAL AND HIS HOUSEHOLD.

GENERAL LEINDRES DE MONSERATE WAS one of the grandees of Cuba. A little man, shrewd, and sharp of feature, with nothing noticeable about his face, save a pair of magnificent black eyes, that, when he was place I, were as it beauty, rare in the eyes of man, but when deepen 1 by passing their Very repose was fearful. The general prided him if up a belonging to the ancien regime, and the serup love of his white cravat and spotless dress-coat accorded well with his polished manners. His dwelling, though one of the handsomest and most spacious on the island, did not lo k pretentious on the outside. It was within, that his in a col magnificence all centered. The sun and the state, and he have brought them down, could hardly have contil him with their brilliancy. The softest and most glittering in ring, composed the hangings of his rooms, every thing was eld or rately gilt, and yet good taste was pred minut.

His conservatories were miracles of beauty and profision, in which birds from every clime sported among rare, strange flowers, and fountains leaped in silvered spray to the crystal roof, keeping along the margin of the water, a continuous massical vibration, that made one hold the very breath to home from trees along the margins of his avenues allowed the hold golden fruit, and in front of the hold the hold in Taking amond, the mango, and the cedar.

General De Monserate, was lit rally the releasing 1 of his little household. Even his sist r. Monda, and angular, little, black-eyed woman, who would do aim or ever a king a if she could find nothing else, was a more cipler in hor local respective presence. The rest of his family consisted of a mine, partly of Spanish, partly of English block a girl of a vertain, and a young man, whose guar than the general was, a flow, passing ate, and extremely elegant personage, and possessing an immense fortune in sugar estates and slaves. The general, in his own right, was poor; but through the favors of a will in his possession, obtained money enough to gratify all his nefarious and extravagant to tes. An old housekeeper, with drooping eyebrows, served doggedly under Senora Mancha; a brighteyed octoroon was the dressing-maid of Senora Minerva. Don Carlos had his valet, and four or five black attendants, and the old general was seldom without his full complement of servants. The house was generally very gay, as the young senorita had not been long from one of the best American schools, and played and sang charmingly, besides possessing a variety of other accomplishments.

Preparations were evidently going on for a great party at the general's home-tead. The servants were continually bearing hampers to and fro from the kitchen (which was a separate building) to the main residence. A happy set they seemed, showing have ivories as they cracked their jokes, although they sweated under the apparent weight. The general's beautiful volunte was oftener brought round than u. and, som times occupied by the old gentleman himself, sometimes by the dashing Cuban, Don Carles. Handsome as was this latter personare, an evil look permented his countenance. His eyes, black and lustrous, pierced like stiletto's, and had all their murderous kenness. A thick, black mustache court I his lips, save one dark crimson line; his forehead was low but mesively shaped, and in bright black chasters, the curls proup-El them elves about it. Every one has seen such men, men along faces they at the same time admired and detected, and from whose attentions, if of pure mind and correct principl s, they instinctively shrank. Once, as Don Carles drove out of the courtyard, he turned and listed his hat, at the same time smiling and banting. The young senera sat in the window, from whi hishe had been throwing crumbs to a pair of Barballan doves. She returned the low, but at the same nament termed back with a pained look. Her mail, who was intelligate enough to make a mewhat of a companion, noticed the motion.

"I won! I what we king Signor Carles is going to atten!" she said smilingly.

"Wedding!" the young girl spoke with pained surprise.

"I heard them talking about it, the general and Don Carlos, when they knew nothing of my being near. It is to take place to-night, at twelve."

"To-night, at twelve," murmured the senera, looking blankly at the octoroon; "to-night, at twelve, did you say? and my uncle?"

"Both of them," replied the girl, with a strange glance, are to take part."

"They will never be so uncourteous as to leave their guests!" exclaimed Minerva, her color heightening.

" No, they will not need do that," was the response.

"What do you mean, Althea!" asked the young girl, now thoroughly roused, and not a little frightened. "There is something you wish to tell me, but dare not. Don't leave me in suspense. My uncle and that man have been pletting, I am sure of it; and oh, Althea, you would not see me staller, if by a word you could prevent it."

"No, indeed, my dear mistress," said the girl, "you shall be saved, if any word of mine can do it. To-night, Padre Rouez is to be here, and Heaven only knows how it could be done, but you would be married."

Trembling from head to foot, the girl sprang from her sont, and began pacing the room.

"It would be monstrous," she muttered, "but they would not scruple; as Althea, says, it would be done,—I bell ve it. Now there is only one way to act, I must appear to a pair or, or my doom is sealed. Little they think that by twelve o'd ck, I shall be passing away from their hated influence. Althea, bring me pen and ink."

The girl placed both before her. Steadying her hand, and controlling the indignant impulse that almost should be a property of the state of the stat wronged did she feel herself, she wrote, as follows:

"HONORED UNCLE:

"I have overheard that I am to be married tonicia, at twelve. This anticipation of an event, which is a successive I have known you to consider quite near, the little approached without due reflection. I ask, there is, that you will allow me to remain in the solitude of my own room, until the hour of midnight, that I may more fitly prepare for the solomn duties about to be put upon me. Be so kind as to let me know by written word, whether or not, you comply with my request. Your niece,

MINERVA MONSERATE."

UNCLE."

In a few moments the octoroon returned, and handed a note to her mistress. The seal was hastily broken, and the senora read:

"BEST OF NIECES:

"You have my full consent to spen I the evening as you choose. I will excuse you to our guests. I will send you a case of jewels that belonged to your mother. Accept my kindest wishes for your happiness.

"Your ever obliged,

The senora tossed the letter from her, with a contemptuous gesture.

"Nothing else could be done," she murmured, below her breath. Then she turned to her dressing-maid.

"I have obtained permission from my uncle to remain at home, till the expiration of the time set for my wed ling. You need not look so strangely, you see I am quite calm about it. Don Carlos will make a noble brid-groom;" the sneer was but half concealed.

"He is not noble; there is nothing noble about him," sail the girl, impulsively.

am not going down to this party-"

Althea started. "Not going." she repeated.

"No, I shall stay in the solitude of my chamber, the greater part of the time," return d her mistress.

"And your beautiful ball-dres! Oh, not to wear it at all!"

"You tinget I am to be married," said Minerva.

"Yes, but it will not be happy. You look anxious and pale, while you talk about it. Besides, it is mean in them to cajole you into it."

"Hush! Althea, remember you talk about my uncle. By the way, is that sister of yours still alone?"

"All alone," was the answer.

"And would you like to stop with her to-night?"

"What! of all things! to-night! when you need me so much? No, no, no, I can go just as well to-morrow. I shall want something then to take off the heart-ache, because, if you are married, you will go away."

"In any case, I shall go away," replied the young girl.
The octoroon watched her mistres narrowly, as she will, "I wish you may earry a happy heart, wherever you go."

"Thank you, Althea. You shall hear from me," murmural the senorita; "good by, and Gol be with you."

CHAPTER IV.

THE SEARCH AND THE ATTACK

A BEAUTIFUL little supper-room, whose table of Indian letter-wood, is spread for three. Enter Senora Mancha, brilliant in a head-dress, composed of red roses, gold foil, and rich lace. Though her face is sallow, her hair is chon as milnight, and her manners still those of the Spanish nobility. The Senora moved to the little stand of marble on which stood an apparatus for boiling tea. In a few moments the steam ascended in graceful curves, white as snow-wreaths. Presently, in came the general and Don Carlos. Punctiliously placing himself at the table, the old gentleman motioned for the rest to be seated.

"Yes, yes, I was never more surprised in my life;" he sail, as if upon some continued subject. "How could she have learned? I am at a loss to know. I think I can trust my sister."

"I think you may;" said that hady with no little emphasis. "I don't care how it was found out, as long as it is known, and she don't object," said Don Carlos, displaying a magnificent diamond ring, as he helped himself to the delicate wafers near; "but the deuce is in it, too. How comes it that she holds no appeal, confesses no disinclination. My dear frient, I for there's treachery at the bottom. Still, I am vain enough to believe that her playing off was only a girlish whim, for she well knows that I chose her from a legion who would fain be the mistress of my heart, to say nothing of other attractions;" he added with a sly smile.

"I am very glad the thing is settled at last," said the general, with a sigh of relief. "From to-night I cease to hate America."

"Not so fast, my dear friend," spoke up Don Carlos, compressing his lips. "I saw Gercham to-day, radiant in whiskers and white linen. The presumptures fool! He was actually in conference with the governor. We are not quite out of the woods yet, general. There are very list going out of the harbor every night—ay! and to-night."

The old Spaniard glance lup, alarm 1. He met the wickedly smiling eye of his ward.

"I am not in the least concerned," said the later. "It takes a great deal to disturb me. The senerals reprocedes, here, even fall upon me with the soothing influence of balmy showers. If my wife ever has hysteries, I shall study them."

The general nodded his head approvingly.

"As for El Americano, let him look out for hims if, if he stands in my way, that's all. But I am f rretting my pretty bird. Senora, oblige me by filling a cup with this charming tea; and now, thank you—ah! with what a grace it was done! Now may I ask a very tremen lous favor—that you yourself, with your own fair hands, will take it up to my pretty bird, with my compliments. Do not be frightened, my grardian," he added, as the old senora left the room smilling if r she was not averse to compliments, even insherer ones, "I have only put in a little soothing powder; it will affect her volition, and perhaps her memory. Under ordinary circumstances, it would but make one sleepy, or more vullarly spetking, stupid. She will not appear any the less introduct that she of you implicitly." We shall astonish our guests who do not drain that they are coming to a well ling."

The general's sister returned with the empty cup.

"How did you find her?" asked Don Carles, witing his mustached mouth, leisurely, with a napkin of exquisite texture.

"Apparently meditating," replied the single "She sat with her prayer-book before her, and similar lands placed with the proof of your thoughtfulness."

"Ah! come round at last, like a cold child." matter to the young man; and he opened his citar case. "I'm little the general, and both strolled out on the open had my for a lounge.

Senora Mancha, however, after ringing in the servents to carry out the table, hurried from room to room to see that all the arrangements were perfect. Flowers block at leverywhere, and fresher was their brilliant beauty, then the cold splend reof murble statuary grouped here and there. It needed but the flashing of the lighted candelabra to give a bewillering effect to the scene. An hour later and the rooms were revealed in their fall magnificence. Soon there was heard the rattle of volantes-by couples came the gay beauties; diamonds, lustrous drapings, bright eyes, nolding plumes, and airy searls, with the that ring of innumerable, gorgeous fans, gave a fairylike brightness to this vision of Caban loveliness. Among these throngs, celebrated for their various attractions, moved the elegant Don Carlos, and the stately little general. On this hand and on that, beautiful, eager eyes awaited them, for each was, in Yankes phrase, esteemed a great catch. Many inquiries were made for the Senora Minerva, all of which were skillfully parried or answered. The lady had begged to be excused till a late hour-she would soon make her appearance, etc., etc. Music abounded—the dance went on—the whist-tables were full-singing sounded bird-like, from one of the distint rooms-groups were partaking of ices in another. S:1dealy appeared upon the gay, hum an parterre, Senora Mancha, her yellow face, puckered with wrinkles-her black eyes ghaming a desperate disatisfaction. Here and there her gay heal-dress went bobbing, and more than one remarked that there was trouble somewhere.

"Where was the general? Oh! where was Don Carles? Had any one seen either of them?"

Yes, the general hall been last so a going into the consistency with a countess, rich and distinguished. Positly he might be found there. Distractedly Schora Mancha hurried to the conservatory, distractingly she gized about. No general. Then she plunged into the crowd again—caught a glimpse of D a Carlos, and made straight up to him.

He felt a pull at his cont sleeve, and boked round frown-in-ly. Dim y felt upon him when he cannot sight of the yellow Mancha, working her toothless mouth.

"In the name of all the saints, what is the matter?" he asked.

"Come, game," was the muttered response.

"What! who?" exclaimed Don Carles, who had not the most distant suspicion of the truth.

"Minerva, your bride."

The Cuban started; turnel as pale as death.

"Do you mean that she has escaped! Was there not a watch near the chamber?"

"Yes, in the very next room, but she went from the window. The lace curtain is drealfally torn, one of the last sets, and how I am ever to repair it—"

Don Carlos broke away, white with suppress I follow. He soon found the general, and electrified him by saying: "Our plans are thwarted, your niece has escaped us. Do you still remain; I will find her—or—" A gleam of fire shot from his wild eyes. The general seemed struck with stepidity.

Instantly a light traveling volante stool at the door. Don Carlos drove rapidly to the custom-house pier. Springly out when arrived there, he sought out the superior officers. They had seen Herman Goreham only two hours is five. He had taken passage in the Eagle, an American packet ship. Yes, there was a lady, his cousin. The Cuban showed his teeth at this.

"Then he has missed justice," he him is "He was a spy, the tool of the Yankee fillibusters. It had a morto his knowledge through papers recently found, a dangerous enemy hal been suffered to leave the country. Power and crib'r ware threatened. He had been, this America, the great of the governor. He had in-inusted hims If into private call la e; in short, he was a scheming, double-lyel villain." Den Cerles was farious. He frightened the officers there agaly, and in the then ten minutes a private and case del grand was private from the custom-house up along the Paso, and along the walls to the sea. It happened that Herman had had did a few moments before, and herried un repetingly along the his carpet-bag. The boat lay concealed in the sacrow, and the stilors, illy waiting-two of them Spaniarls-hard the arversition of the guards posted on the pin and drive off allently where they could not be sen. If mulille, where was the Engle? There was no time to be by . A world it dinping lay in the harbor. The verte all heal into the street. A belt of thick forest -mast after mest sire in a away, and bayward, how close the vessis were! Serew tring, shipof the line, and no telling which is the Earle. Des Celled III not despair, however. A bout was in readily, and simily and laboriously it was maneuvered between the unwieldy hulks. He could find no boatmen at hand, and dared not waste time in hunting one up, therefore he seized a pair of oars himself. Just as he passed under the side of a heavy Spanish sloop, a sudden flash, and a heavy weight made his boat rock again. It was the body of some unfortunate sailor, dead, of the fever, and in the moonlight he watched it sliding off with the current. Superstitious, as all Spaniards are, he regarded this event as a poor omen, and bent his energies towards finding the Eagle, with less hope for success than before. Baffled rage tugged at his heart harder than his hands at the oars, and as he glided from stern to stern, and at each attempt met with failure, he cursed his own fate, and particularly cursed Los Americanos.

Meanwhile, the Eugle had been got under way, and was now majestically making for the sea. Don Carlos had missed the sailors in their return to the vessel—had missed his bride and happiness, but it allayed somewhat the irritation of his mind to learn on his arrival on the pier, that Herman Goresham was a prisoner, and in the custom-house ready to be carried to the guard-house. It occurred to Don Carlos that he would, if possible, make the young man a means of conveying the Senera Minerva into his possision again.

Accordingly, he sought him. The young man stood unler guard, looking sternly from face to face, as if still mutely questioning his captors.

"So, I see it all," he said, as Don Carlos came into his presence. "Villain, why have you deprived me of my liberty?"

"That shall be shown," said the Cuban, scowling back at him. "It is no crime, I suppose, to steal a young hely from her home—from the arms of her afflanced husband, on the very night of her expected wedding."

"Thank Gol! I have saved her;" said the young man, drawing a long breath.

Don Carles sprang towards Lim, his hand under his vest, but in a minute he bethought himself and forced his heatel face into calmness.

"Young men," he said falling back, and common ling his temper under the secrnful glance of his rival. "I have the power to place you in a dangern where the light of day can never penetrate—where the walls obtaining as—where you will have but the solitary crust and the juret water—where your companions will be the worms and the rate instead of the birds and the flowers of this beautiful land."

"Very poetical," said Herman, as the Caban pared a second for breath. The white lips of the latter transled with rage, but still be did not let his passion must raim.

"Or I can give you liberty," he added.

"That is my right. To-morrow I shall see if a citizen of America is to be captured for no crime; detained a rain t his will by a jealous Spaniard."

The Cuban drew a long, deep breath; his eyes glittered—his fingers worked nervously against his vest.

"You are free if you deliver Senora Minerva into her uncle's custody."

"Impossible. The young lady is by this time on her way to America. The Hagle sailed at twelve. By consulting your watch you will find it is somewhat more than a half hear past that period."

"You shall answer for this, follow—you shall retain prism, or be hung as a spy, while I shall I we no means catrict to recover the young lady. For your comfort, he with I shall take the fistest sailer in port, and it will go burt 10, with my resources, I do not find the nices of G nead M as reas. Then, if she be not too much disgraced by your fact, I shall marry her."

It was Herman's turn to repel now. Hespring liberally ger upon Don Carlos, collided him, and him the face, and the reached, shook him till be was black in the face, and thing him at arms-length almost son bos, and planting on the flow. At that moment, General Monstate enter his Himann was struckling in the hold of a powerful silling. Don Carlot his dress in disorder—his hair thrown will hy from sile to sill, his face purple and happen, her the yearst American had hid hid a choking group, was just rising with the said of two cast inhouse officers, from the floor, covered with older, and sile to white with passion. Blood had been slow, and Himann was marched off by the authorities, and thus ended a day that promised so much happings at its dawning.

CHAPTER V.

MINERVA ON SHORE.

MINERVA MONSERATE, the young lady left so unexpectedly on board the American vessel, was, as our readers have already seen, the niece of an old Spanish grander, and consequently of noble descent. We have hinted before, that English and Spanish blood mingled in her veins. Her father had married a young creature, Maria Wells, the daughter of a poor minister of the church of England. Much surprise was manifisted at this unequal match, as it was called, but Sen or De Mouscrate, the younger, was by the mere force of his character, as much feared as a lmired, and when he boldly returned from his travels, bringing his pretty British flower, nobody demurred in his presence, not even the domine ring sister, Smora Mancha. The young man seemed very much change lafter his marriage-put on the harness of labor, an l Went to work amassing a fortune. His whole heart and soul Seemel absolutely given up to money-making. A child was born—it made little difference; his wife die l-there was bri f mourning; still he bought and sold, and people began to think there would soon be no end to his wealth. He spent as freely as he made. Though he never indulated in parties, burdly amas ments of any kind, he allowed his sister saf-Reignt to cover all such expenses, for in her young days, Sonora Moncha was very gay. At lest, in the milst of his procomes for turning everything he touched into wealth, he died, but his preperty possessed such accumulative force, that year by year house, hands, and ships were alled, so that his child was the wealthiest heires in all Caba. But of that fact, she was brought up in entire ignorance, as only her uncle, the lawyer who drew up the will, and a very few with a kn. w its conditions. Of this, however, more hereafter.

Minervalual become a reastoned to the motion of the yes-with spells of long and deep despondency, yet she enhanced to keep before her mind the evident certainty of meeting Herman as soon as they landed, or, at all events, shortly after. Whether she thought the winds would be more favorable to his voyaging, or that love might guide the helm so that both vessels should strike shore at the same moment, I know not; but the fact of the sudden storm having delayed the Earle, and indeed put her out of her course, gave her expectations a more sanguine coloring. On the day before the volume in sight of port, she sat on the dock, her mentle thrown gracefully over her head so that its folds fall in artistic lines over her form. She was knitting, while very near her sat the stewardess, Ban lola, reading aloud.

Suddenly the girl paused—the fluth of her red block was faintly visible under her dark skin.

"How I wish I was white, a norita, and had a lover like him. Ah! it must be very pleasant."

"Be contented with your lot, Bandola," s.il Min-rva; "the sweetest rose has thorns, and you might find more sorrow than joy in the fate you covet. The captain says we shall eight New York in a day or two," she alled, after some ments had elapsed.

"Yes, you have been there before, haven't you?"

"Oh, yes—twice, and each time staid three years. I love New York dearly, it is a great, glorious place."

"Tell me what you came here for?" pressel the stewarders.

"For my fite," said Minerva, smiling and blushing.

"Your fate," queried the girl, wonderingly.

"No, no; to go to school. Didn't we have spin ill times though, at Malame N—s school? There's where I first saw line," she added drountly—then started, remains plant who listened.

"Ah! I hope he will be there. What pleasure to see him standing on shore as the vessel goes in! Oh, I have hill be there."

"I hope he will," sail Minerva, her bright for all willing as a gloomy doubt shadowel her mind.

"But were there no Spanish guillion in who wented purity marry them?"

"Oh, yes," said Minerya, smiling, "one in particular; the richest man in all Cuba,"

"And why didn't you?"

"Because I didn't like him-because I deteste I him," she added passionately.

The shadow grew deeper on her brow; her work fell from her hands. The malignant face of Don Carlos, with its dark, vengeful eyes came before her. What if they had met, Carlos and Herman?-both quick, resolute men. Oh, the sickening apprehension that crept into her heart as the possible result suggested itself. And she alone in the world, poor and dependent, with but the temporary resort to her jewels to keep her from famine. Well, better even that than the wife of that horrible man; better to earn her bread, though how those helpless hands were to accomplish such wonders could not even be imagined.

"There, now you are sad again," said Bandola.

"Yes, I was thinking."

"Why do you think? I never think long enough to make me unhappy. The way to enjoy life, I believe, is to think as seldom as you can."

Minerva made no reply to this sally. A dreadful forchoding had taken complete possession of her mind. She could not sit there in the clear breeze, the pure sunshine-but gathcring up her work she went down into her state-room. There, familing about the pocket of her traveling dress, she found a little purse, through whose meshes glittered gold.

"Poor, old uncle-he gave me this," she murmured; "he was good, kind, and liberal in all but one thing. Why would he force me, till I had nearly been sacrificed, to marry that dreatiful man? What was the fascination Don Carlos exerted over him? I cannot think. Well, at least, I shall have sufficient to pay my passage, and to keep me in some hofd until"—Lere she paused. She would have a Hel, "until I meet Herman," but her heart fell as heavy as lead when she thought of it. Even the captain's cheerful face and joyial lanmage lacked their phesent influence for her. She drealed the sight of the shore, for she had never been so far alone, ind now she had none but the captain and poor Bandola to depend upon.

Hearing the step of the former in the cakin, she lifted herself from her painful reverie and went out.

"We shall soon near land," said the captain, the rily—"but see here, you are looking puls and ill again—I must not have this," and he shook his head.

With great effort Minerva kept back the tears.

"I suppose I must learn to tran let my own busines," she said, trying to smile, "so I am going to pay you my pleases money." She emptied the contents of her purse upon the table. "There, will you please see if that is enough to cover the expense of my voyage?"

"Tut, tut. Just put that money right back, my dur young lady. I'm the owner of my ship and have no one to one although he sides myself—so you'll please oblize me by keeping what little money you have; you will need it all, yours it?"

"Oh, I cannot, indeed I cannot be under so hean obligation," said Minerva, the quick color coming. "I have other means." She faltered. "You will oblige me inflainly by accepting the passage-money."

"But I tell you my young friend, I fully expect to be Herman Gorcham in the city of New York, and he age of with me for the passage, so I shall settle with him, and you must let me have my way, for I generally do when I set out for it. I'm a very resolute man, you see."

Minerva sat quite perplexed and under it. The captain lifted the purse and swe ping the gold into it, placed it in her hand.

"And now we must talk a little about the fit it," he said.
"It is possible when you limb, our young friend may not be visible. In that case where would you like to go? Have you friends or relatives in New York?"

"Some acquaint mees, but no relations. I have made up my mind to go to an hotel."

"I know of an excellent private boarding-hore," said the captain; but she exclaimed eagerly-

"Oh, not there—among the many I shall be more." I prefer an hotel; there I can be also until I know may have she added in a lower tone, and with a quiverlar lip.

"Just as you please, though it is my opinion that you would be better suited in a pleasant family, but I will not at any to dictate, you of course know best. Consult your own inclination, only remember to come to me as a friend in whatever circumstances of trial you may find yourself."

Two days after that Minerva was driven from the pier to to the hotel she had chosen. Almost a stranger in a great city, her heart sink at times, though she strove to think that Herman would surely come—she should not have to wait but a little while. But how should she pass the time during that dreary waiting? Her little room, up many flights of stairs, had a cheerful look-out, but it grew monotonous to watch the ever-passing multitude, the same unvarying round of faces. Her dresses were taken out again and again, but there every thing was finished, and she dared not array herself in other than the plainest habiliments for fear of attracting attention. She little knew how often the question went the rounds, "Who is that beautiful girl dressed in gray, with the dark, Spanish eyes?"

One day she had been unusually sad. Captain Wyllies had been to inform her that as yet he had heard or seen nothing of Herman Goreham. He seemed, himself, perplexed and unhappy about it, and could no longer make excuses. He had come to consult with Miss Minerva—would she return to Caba? He was nearly ready for the next trip, and he would see her safely back in the mid-t of her family.

"Never," was her reply, with a paling check. "I shall never return to Caba. Captain Wyllies, you will inquire into this mystery—you will write me whether Herman be alive or—" she could not speak the word.

"Be assured I will use every means in my power to learn of his whereabouts. If there has been foul play—min l, I say if—the matter shall be brought to light as far as I have means and influence. I will not not leave a stone unturned. Meanwhile if you find spies upon your path, you had better avail yourself of the kindness of a friend of mine, a very estimable hely, who, if you give her this eard, will, for my sake be like a mother to you. Do not scraph to use my name, or to call upon me if you are in need."

When he had gone the young girl was more wretched than ever. She passed the time in writing. Sellom went out, and for the lack of exercise, began to grow thin and pale.

One day she was inspired with a sall-n in.pale to walk ' to the Battery. So arranging hers If in her mest unest nuatious dress, she walked slowly along, her eyes I king straight forward as if she never again expected to see they thing of sifficient interest to attract their glances. The freshalr, H. wing cooler as she neared the water, revived her hower reand brought a flint color to her check. A German band dis oursel sweet music, and children in bright dr --- ranning engris past her, made her heart beat faster with their happy smill a and cheerful voices. But as she hurried by all the and stord looking at the water, the old desolate, bone sick follage care over her. Only to hear a voice that had ence be a faullier, how sweet it would be! She sat down up n our of the benches, her pale flore bayward, and the past with its impoiness and its serrows came over her in a turn illustic. She thought of her school-days—of the plant little paries of Saturday night when some of the young stall all who were well known by the principal, were allow I to mingle - 1. Hy with the pupils. The bright the of Herman with its bir eyes and gold brown hair, seem leven now beside her a then. How little in those happy days she the glat of any coming dirkness? The merry girls in their bright dr. s. all so eager to receive one mile from Herman, the prince of the college, as he was playfally dall-1, can through by. Southern eyes and night black tres -- Nurthern brows and fair golden hair, but he had turned from all to her. Single over again the happiness of hearing him call her "black I"of listening to his voice that seemed to her of all massis the Sweetest. Noblest, bravest, most be callful of all the said of men he was to her! Then he had fall one like to the smary land of her birth. For two burning sunta is he had bear i the pe-tilence to be near her. Shull in the she : ... I the first time, that Don Carles thrust his dark press. her and happines—the cell hour when he grew july as of Di Andrica, and became more impereing the his will. His thank Lints and wicked insinuations south level new in hor end His black, haril eyes soreled her sod, and r did the dradilit reparence that had been she ping in her had sinchildho I when he was her constant torm hier. And her what had be done with Harman? Had be filled his fill is ful thrats? Did the golden hair by matted in some foul corner, while the eye, liner than heaven, sent stony glances after that they could never see? B fore she know it, the round that were relling from her eyes, and hening voices coming that way, sin hestily threw down her thick vail and turally from the sea Two young men passed her. She could not forfer one plane, and that ent a thall of four through brain and heart. The personale nearest her-tall, straight, and swarthy—was a fireiner. It needed but one gion at his thick, curling must che and piercing eyes to recoglize him. It was Sener Abrates, a Caban, and boon compenion of Don Carlos. Why was he lere, following so quickly upon her abone, but as a spy sont by her unde's ward? The hornible apprehension seized her that she was discovered -th t Don Carlos had probably taken the next vessel that saled ader the Eagle, and they were on her track; they would hand her down as the hourd hunts the time! I have. She grew with and cold at the thought, and gathered her vail in thicker this. She fard that the young man half presides has I. in I har as if the total to speak, and, as she harried away with trend ling limbs it seem I to her that she was followed. After a long, quick walk, however, she ventured to look round. There was no one in sight and she breathed more freely.

CHAPTER VI.

AN OLD ACQUAINTANCE.

Emunging into the theoretical fire, de it in a late it strets were totally unfamiliar to l. r. and a varianter a was all i to her and anticipations. To be lest in this bewill in a city was not one of the least of cylls, and to crown by continue, she could not recall the name of hir hat her can eftistreet where it was best 1. The sall nilightenes I by the appearance of a familiar for, heldsiven every thing circum Stopping for a moment to collect hers like sie to it the path that seemed most likely to bed to familiar signs, and hurried on. Street after street she turned, and call simil farther from her destination. Dizzy, faint, and haville all and knew not which way to turn, nor how to ask for lime as homeword. Salienly as she stepped upon a cresing there was a load cry—the cluttrar of here's here-villet string gling—a hot, maist breath till on her clean. See el 1 her eves and would have falled, but some of the family and the arain upon the sile will. Laking party and at a result dazy and confirmation of the confirmation of t gentlan n and a lady, as lin en citarit. I re-inthe Was Presided by Farr Abraha, Decreek mar, he was called pay and by he had in the fill the Spanish.

"My their Senger De Manner, I am a bid in high he parties the control of the property of the control of the con she could invent no excase.

"My sister; my Oled, J. T.V.I., A." The late "- thus were rapid—a pretty face bowed. Someone with a very politic and foroid ling eye bowed also. Minerva could see ely take note, for her soul was fall of the most district apprehensions. They had found her—they would have no main untried to entropher. Where should she fly? Howestop the do in that so in a awaiting her? Fortunitely the name of her hotel recurred to her, and she was driven theres.

"May I call!" ask I the young man in a low voice, as he land the out at the door of the hotel; "I have smoothing of importance to communicate."

Like lightning it this bed through her mind that if she make month hat of this young man, and appealed to his pity, his heart, she might find a sarer means of escape from her persecutors. "You may call," was the reply.

Soor Alrates returned to his bereautic in high spirits.

"My dear Dora, I mean to make the most of this affeir," he sail, as he sat with his sister not long after their ration, "and I depend a great deal on year to aid me."

"I don't un berstand you," said his sister, using her fan hanguidly, and caressing with a little slipp and foot, the early coat of a snowy lap-dog.

"Is it possible you don't know that this senora whem we can ener knowling down to-lay, is the run way niece of Gongal Leinles do Mons rate? Of course, though as you tre trach from boar linguistical, you can know but very little about it."

But the young lady had waked up.

"What I that sir! with the philin, plan colored media, the

"Thus what I'm noting to tell you, but you must express no surprise—she has run away."

"By with whom?" The hily was now all attention.

"With no one, untortuned by; or fortuned by the gration on who intended to give her the local rot his company, was arrest for the way. She made her escape. You must know, a fill all of mine who could be in the worderfully, is in local to the girl, and with the fill received by the local like. Now you see, who were should refer a which if you have. The fill is the country of the respective.

"Why, to day? But Man ed. way it that in a ", was ever he is, come and attend to his own lessiness. He is strangely short-sighted," I think.

"The fact is, he was slightly in lisp sed, and not very slightly either," was the reply. "Between you and model him. I have a suspicion that El Anariovo tried to throttle him, and nearly succeeded. At any rate I found him in hel just leafore I came away, bundaged up and quite exhausted. Now, the young lady is a beautiful creature, as you must solutely edge, and it would not be amiss to win her in split of them all."

"It would be delightful," said the senora, closing her gos sleepily, yet smiling as she spoke—"to have so rich and hand-some a sister-in-law. But it seems to me she has compressed herself somewhat to run away in this romantic fishion."

"Oh, no—under thee ircumstances it is not at all shorther, besides great heiress a can do much without providing the world's scandal. She is an innocent, quiet little thing. I have agine, and yet she has spirit," was the reply. "She is toolly without acquaintances, if I judge right, and will to global a friend, poor creature. Now you must be that in all. She will confide in you—she will love you, and possibly he if I ally heart may reach out to your brother, and with her to runsister you may do what you please, for I am all reshe is 10 and well as romantic."

"I wonder if she has many jewels?" mated the start. Her brother smiled in a sarcastic way.

"Oh, of course; you women never for t year jowels. If a house was on fire, I believe, and you were a method, the first thought would be the jewels, the next, the child. To be surplined has brought her jewels in anticipation of reasons. I fancy I see you spen that house or the problem treasures. Besides you will suit each other in other reservables the is not long from school—you have jest but. When the first of entertaining conversation there is in star for just how a pity I could not be behind the curtain? I will the rewith what conform bely poor but participations and a fall not be behind the curtain?

"You need never be afraid that I shall by a part man Manuel."

"No, on second thought, I don't know as I need. Your tastes are too much like my own, and you are—parlon me—too lazy to seek a sensation."

To this, the only reply was a small, low laugh.

CHAPTER VII.

THE NEW RESIDENCE.

Minimized reached her little room quite worm out with excitement, and fill littlessly on the little silken beinge that sharel most of her rest. The mail come in with I melicon. She motioned her to set it down, but it remained untist i. Her mind was in a tempelt, world it ever be clear again? Sin a brewell with all her might to fram a speech, a pretty, Pathetic little appeal that might, as novelists say, "up he the stonist heart;" and by the time the gong sounded for proptration for dinner, she had youd hers lish ressial. To by, alo, she water-l upon a rich r garment, and an antique Circin of gold and tarquoise, of whise value she little dream i. Hep-halaw denel in her havy harr, and tou her her her with its charmed hus. She but never book i more been fal than when she gibled to her sat the bartable, and the homere of admiring eyes greeted her, though she was too much preoccupied to notice it.

Glueing up, however, she perceived, fix ally razing at her with those strange unfathousable or s, the senor to whom she had been involuted in the baronche. He nolled, she returned the token of recognition, though the in effecting han again, give her unersiness.

"I thought so," went the rounds of the table; "teld you sho was Spanish. That gentleman is an Havana planter. A lady of mark, probably, or the contrary. Velas, i.z. has the reputation of a dissipated roue."

Mounwhile, Minerva awaited the coming of Don Call of friend with some trepilation, and when his earl was suit up, could searcely summen the courtes to much him. He, however, did not seem to notice her a ryousness, but began in an off-hand manner to speak of the beauty of the day, and of several little things unimportant in themselves, save as the hinges upon which greater topics hang.

"You have come from Don Carles," at lest Miller I and courage to exclaim, after a pause; "I think that is what year would say."

"I left him ill," he returned with a periller smile; "yes, senora, I have received my orders from him, but it is public altogether upon you, whether I shall execute them."

Minerva looked anxious.

"I promised to serve him to the lost of my alling, but it would be doing him an injustice to bring him and h

"Oh! how I thank you!" she calding he is it is member was becoming now more apparate. "Yet well not use unjust measures to force met he had a find."

"Do I look like such a one?" askel the programme duching brow flushing.

No, indeed he did not; at that mental, sill it is it, and matel as he thought by an entirely generals in the semel too noble for treachery. His dark open was fully sincere, his smalle was born of a general in a second

Then the "might be," was shalowed form I form I for the life to an, he had put his real illes li in the barant.

"But you must not remain in this is it the way of a continued. "It will not do in a place was notify and the tion about I. I have taken a suite of reasons to any single the interest own supplies. We have exposed supplies in fact entirely by ourselves. To ensure success to the plan by which I mean to delaber of a linear success to the plan way) Don Curlos, my tile al, you had not a linear Common at the hotels; you would be reasonable, and plans this Every day, almost, the reason Common the plans of some conspiracy."

"What you say is true," sail Mineral; "Ille Son Villes opens to whom you present him to be, the it at the failed d'hote."

"He dill" exclain 1 Stor A'rais, a fill a mile on his face. "Ah! he is a dener to be to be in it in it is called ed, fair hely, I have him under my target."

But, where shall I go?" asked Minerva; the pathos in her count nance transferred to her voice. "I do not will to be a cognized by thes: I have known before."

my sister is very lonely (as I am away much of my time necessarily), and wishes eften for a companion. She informed me privately, to lay, that she had fallen in love with you, and that it would be charming if she might prevail upon you to share her society while we remain in New York, which will not be to a. . Here is something she has written on the subject."

Minerva took the delicately worded note, her expressive so interested in her.

"She is very kind," she said thoughtfully.

"And may I say that you will come?" asked the young man on only, eazing at her with new and delighted admiration, which she would hardly have liked had she som; "there you can live in as strat seclasion as you like, and together, we will, I think, manage Don Carlos."

This lest man over deal; hier. It seemed so plus dut to have to add from is, real factors; a weather who preside naith and less and her; a man who was too notice to recomize the claims of an usurper like Don Carlos.

"Yes, if you think she will not weary of me, I will re"

"Or, redict that you will not wanty of her," said Shir Abad a; an explaint the lighting up his dark eye. "She is the venest little chatterbox, and will, I think, Sandhar s, jabber to death."

"If you knew how I desire to have sear one talk to me," she will be I need to greatly moist as she result by the long, should be passed in her little chenter; "you would feel how rateful that chattering you talk of, will be to me. Only how I have been been a little bird to have believing, and sing to me sometimes."

"Here is the a lates, I will be every thing with you," he said with a stinctive delicery. "You have only to summon a weiter and one or him to call a carriag, then give this direction to the series, and in these main ites you will find D rawaiting for you, all expectation."

There was an embarrissing pass. Min real factors of a word that would lead to some hant of Harnen. But some could not. Even the attempted question, we clear Dan Call's were very ill, and what was the taster with him, do look a her lips. "There will come a three "some test to be fall, struggling to keep up har course till to be some that to depressing folling with recard to Hamen classes that to heart to aching. With a smooth best all as a rank stack his bave, and Minerva, somewhat heart in split, what to her room to make preparations.

To her extreme surprise, when she as a lifer her ill, the charges set down to her, and ented to nearly all the mill she possessed. Unused to residiting expressed try kinds had or level treely, little knowing the even a less of any kinds at punst be paid for, especially it the little she had as a first wealth in the manners, does, or helds of the starter. However, she took the anature from her shader started in head had attended to her peaking, she proved has her as the held had directed.

It was with a comparatively light heat that S is the the martie steps I chargeto an elected mask mask a later to a part of the city. Within could be beautiful single gradual of, the light, silvery chords of some thing mask to a, to the at the nearest win low, the richest exotics given it to apply any

No sooner had the servant answered the ring, then coming steps were heard. A beautiful girl entire durable of the last muslin, her durk hair compatitishly dress it, the last injure in Spanish for dop noting from her wrist, her begins bright with a beaming welcome, came harriedly from a selection, and met Minerva with a childlike caress.

the apartment she as I just 1 it, so the formation of the apartment she as I just 1 it, so the formation of the honor, and then dropping less if beside hor, as if she were a wee girl. "There is Coco, my mail; she will: I voy a converse bonn tand namely. Do yet like the residence? I the besides, it is so much exert in to play, both, to t is it of the operas, I form to which, but we will as a probability of the operas, I form to which, but we will as a probability of the is very as a large of the point of and he is very as all. Are yet 1 to 1. Will yet go in your room and lie down?"

"If you place, for a few measure," said Minerva, anxious to be alone with her new baptimes, for it was a happines to know a sin that's me one telt an interest in her.

Dora I I her into an exquiste little room, long with draper's of the sift. It is not so much like bottle to be surrounded with these lateries, that Minerva could have cell for joy like a very child. As it was, a few grateful tears foll quietly, but they were so nothered away by smiles. She litted the curtain, the window I I on a baldony, and I asked out on a planeauty and, burdened with flower plats, in the miles of a pretty foundary, whose bright face shour through the spray with an everbaming planeautof wordering delight. Not for off, she could see the iron railines of a park, and in the tail trocker and her, the birds sangle tyly. Here, then, she had found rest; here she could treely test all her grids, in they here the first sangle to the all here grids, in they here the could receive the all here grids, in they here the slice on its of Herman's five, for that he was dealt foully by, she never for an instant doubted.

After a law members of ust, showers a rain into the recta where I) have was a liter new file it by nestling on a language, her eyes closed, the fan hanging listless.

"How greefel she is," the old Maerya, summing the delicar poise of the lim's, whileng the wante, rough harm. Dora opened her eyes.

"On there you are," she can be felly; "I thought you were never continued. Have you restell! Do you never have more color than now? I should think that you had been ill. What pretty hards! do be more than a Manerya, smith; and pleased, held out her hands for inspection.

ring! Is it an engagement ring?"

Him reals health and the large world her, she did not went for the him to he had any thing else could.

"We shall get along admiringly together."

"Dryan play? Yes, or aprilial and since I super. So des Manual, he knew you in Chia, did be not?"

reply.

"I have heard him talk of you and of a Don Carles. Pray what kind of a man is Don Carles? Manuel dislikes him exceedingly, I should think."

"He is pleasant, generally," said Minerva, custicasly; "but he does not make many friends, I believe."

"Here comes Minuel; it must be supportion."

The young man came in-with graceful self-possion greeted Minerva, and presently the three were south at an elegant little supper-table, on which glisten da silver a mile. Scarcely had the meal been tasted when the der-bell rang, and Senor Velasquez was ushered in. Manual's f. - s.i.l.l. w provoking! and the planter him. If applicate with electric suavity, but seemed none the less inclined to partale with them. His presence destroyed Min rya's plastre; slaws sure the man looked upon her with an evil eye, that he was a spy of Don Carles; she felt it every than he will sell her with such claborate politeress. The event the least of the same of pleasantly in spite of his present. Martil was a 'Will' singer, Senor Velesquez played the file of the Miller consented to sing a few little b. P. is. Buthetter - r thred to rest, the young ghil had a ratta a rect if satura bolings, and when Dora, with her claimstage and when Dora, with her claimstance of a restaurant arms about her neck, and while the Port par think Manuel sings well," she made the add raply, "I think pour brother does every this g well, my door his . !!"

CHAPTER VIII.

HERMAN RELEASED.

Don Carlos stool before a looking glass. Many were his muttered imprecations as he met the gaze of a distingued free. His right eye rejoiced in numerous colors beside its cricinal black. A wound upon his check had not improved the appearance of his countenance. The Don was dressed in a gay gown, and from his embroidered cup depended a heavy tassed of gold. His dressing-case was a model of luxurious logetty. Bottles chased with silver and gold—little cushions of string softness—brushes with handles of ivory—every thing rich, expensive, and rare.

"The sounded! he will pay dear for this," mattered Don Carles as he lifted a cane from its corner and Imped out of the room.

"Ah! welcome down-stairs, my dear Carlos," sail the old zet, cal, rising with alacrity, while at a look from him, wither I Mancha, who was embroid ring on a bit of yellow satin, brought a light foot stool for the invalid. "And how are you this morning?"

"A little stiff in the joints," said Don Carlos with a disagreeable beigh. "My good aunt if you would be so kind as to leave guardy and me alone a few moments."

The senora lembly picked up her work and but the room.

"Now my good friend, what have you heard, and what have you be a doing?" asked Don Carles, turning to the general.

"Won lers! won lers!" evel timed the ceneral, rubbing his lands with intense satification. "The consul has stirred binas if in the business, and the kear prisoner militiess of all continuey. My dear fellow, El Americano is to be purled in that all pen con this need his leaving the country."

"Well," quelit Der Cales, impelettly, in a viet that brayet that be expect thuse mas of impelement. "Listen; this is my plan. I have bribed Solvetto, the keeper, and he is to have a private carriage at the degree the jail. There will be two strong men inside with reposeur understand."

"And they will strangle him,"—cric l Don Carl swith fle . lish joy.

"Oh, no; not so bad as that. We would not consider murder, my boy, because I am old, and the sin would not heavily on my conscience. You have heard me toll of La Vintresse."

Don Carlos nodded his head.

. "It was once the most magnificant ende in the environs of Havana. Ah! many a splendid party have I given there, but fire and the cholera, and the huni-cock as has but their united rigor to destroy it. You have no illustration of glass d soldeness of the place. The walls are don list. I—tim in less have no boundaries—the water he overil a i, and only a part of the house stands, a melacion of refr. in the part of the negro quarters. In this let, there is a struct to which on the plantation I used as a julk. All I year begin to understand. The prospect books out up nations: ...!; intrees, the distant hills, and an arilphin. The is is a some ture living within a mile, and nobedy pass there, the place has the reputation of being haunt. It is harmted by the spirit of desolation. There is where, at them, I shall have this insulting American conveyed, and he shall be in that he c an not annoy a gentleman with impanity hard, or it has own lind. Old Jose who is cruel energh for any laty, and have there and take care of him. Jose has a late for the light, and is just lazy enough to cover such a lit. He was in all La Vintre-se, and I have bela rechapt particular line. A dreary time it will be for El Americane. He wall have to looks, no papers, no amusement, little exerts; in the will probably go mal, for I shall take an entitle in the enply him with news, and of no very cl. at little."

"Gerr Um, that is a magnificent plan or I was inject your anus," cried Don Carlos, his mean at least of such that "But," his factor or grower or in—" we are the first of that is any Should Mineral. She has employed us. Since Allows writes me nothing encouraging."

"Have no fear on that score—we shall find her. But I tell you it will not do to trust to others; we must go for ourselves."

"Do not I know that?" cried the Culon vehenontly. "Should I not have been there ere this, but for the vile clutches of that Yankee?"

"Patience, patience," said the general, "you will go there yet. You are nearly well. A ser-voyage will refresh you, and fally repair all damages. I have engaged our passage,"

"What!" Don Carl's starte! from his chair-" and I this figure ?"

"I tell you, you will be well enough by the time we lind in New York. We will set out immediately to Saratora, and it will go head with me but we will find her."

"To Surabeat-Zounds! no, not there, above all phose"

"I tell you, yes; here is a letter found in the pocket of that intriguing Yankee; it is directed to his parents who, I should presame, are yalgar farming people in that sime village of Saratoga. What more likely than that she should be found there? Once let me get her in my presssion—the reservice child. I'll teach her that she can not lose cildfinds so readily."

Don Carlos must. "There is som thing in that," he said. "She may have known of the fact that his people lived there."

"To be sure, and there's where she is, snur and cozy, setting them will about him. We will make their cars burn, my Don! We will make her glul to gain once more the protein of a home. As soon as the sun sets, Jose will be here with the carrier. Our volunts will also be really and we can drive impredictely after to the Grand Carcel."

The explicit was dark and the streets of Hayana illy habed or not at all. It was late into might when the general at this world of their sears in the velocite, and were driven really after the clumy carriers that was to convey the prisoner from his dreary confinement to one as much more errol as it was not note. The root building form I up darkly, stending her the for of the Ponta. Palacello it reared its real fact, and the dim startlets made it an impoint of the Attick to the class of the Renth Garden startlets the tan impoint of the Attick to the class of the Attick to the A of his cell lander forth and becing for heavy. In the two months and mared like also assi, har alsisted from the salin digular man, to the part border and open tive. His creek was thin, his bord and her win or m. willing be executive relative medical execution and the series of the se was not his only nor his grain to the blooms in the line the an armid of Mingrae, History of the endiof the Hall hall all builts bearing it or it lie priserate die, will be de la call te te parte that have sortion him by my, little that are in the to place by so that a statut the company of a er. I but whether it had receed him be did not in we He had been able in this but's our plant, which process to ut Twa regulated by the addity of the pair new, to exist a forter agarem at than the common cells when the white he say and the sounds be heard, offerd bis meral totale. By he was by no means pland in enable solute. His remates were, a military man who qual like hours in a rist and gaming, and a planter incurrent difference political etfence, who joined his committee heart in the sold in the ting angreements. The room was him but not confidently. Great webs, black with are and dist, in in 1 . And the min ces. The walls were deligned with recording to rader scrawls, in Spanish position That is a very time the ceiling obscure. The two pile has write to he is ilding exterior, who when they i and Herman avere to i ining in their immoral practices, as all blain with a tip thin all it it was guarded by dopt at and do at Special. He understoolit all, for thou hour 's tre tree with the try in the language, be could really and translate with so.

To-night the image of Minters had been a set the major of property and distinct. He had firsted him the pulling in the fever in his vain attempts to be singularly and at start of the had been distinct the confidence show that so we had been him to be a few to be so we show that if, the first had been distinct to be so we show that if, the first had been distinct to be so we show that it is the first had been distinct to be so we show that it is the first had been distinct to be so we show that it is the first had been distinct to be so we had been distinct to be a first him to be a first had been also mand, but they we will be the first had been distinct the property of the first had been distinct to be so we had been distinct.

vivilness. He walked back on the the rapidly, and envied the two sleepers who had thrown thems less apen their clouks and snored soundly.

A julier entered with a copiler do post by or local measure. The form r held a small paper lantern in his hand and moved with a slow step, as if in the capacity he was, he desired not to be the bearer of good news.

The man came forward with his usual creeting, "Do you confess your fault?"

"I have nothing to confest," was the answer.

"It makes no diderence," replied the jailer, calmly—"you are at liberty. A carriage awaits you at the door,"

"At liberty!" Charmed works—the young man's face brightened—h: straightened himself. "At liberty!" he repeated incredulously.

"You will walk this way if you please, senor," still the man.

Herman followed incredulously. He took down his hat, his linen oversch, and put them on as one in a dream. He has a local into the great black positionway and filt the wind from the sca strike damp again to his forcheck. The julker held up his hemp in the wide entrance. It flashed full in the frees of the general and Don Carlos;—will omen! For a moment Herman drew back—her toured company, class why these two of all man, and here at such an hoor, class upon including the The carriage stool just beyon!

"Yen are to go immediately from the country, senor," said the jailer.

"Am I to be driven to the pier?" asked Herman.

"I know nothing about it, so, except that by order of the consulyent are at liberty," was the reply, somewhat impatiently.

Homan daw a long broth and stepped out. The carries don was thing open. He holist 1--pl.—I has foot up a the step-there was a stable photo it is a His worst feas with vertical-he was a prise a record of half bound.

Don Car s and the general but had out load and long, then drove home to confer together.

CHAPTER IX.

A NEW EXPERIENCE.

IT was settled that the general, his sist r, and word, with to travel with any number of servants, and any and antical liggage. The decision threw Senora Manda into alternative stasies of rapture and despair. Rupture, are the land and her an unlimited purse; despair, that she was all, and and quite capable of playing the coquete, as it had been her public and plea ure to do in former years. However, she will all and play her wardrobe, and kill somebody with casp has been all allegables as she meant to have for larger the dresses; above all, such variety! She call have and principle in minety-nine, but the hun in his, and she have considered the needed tranks, and sending for more. Very reads, was to Althen, Minerva's dresing a like to the child of the

"The tell you, what, Althen," said the old some, a first in her rocking-chair, and hanguilly familiage of I didn't think of it, but if you'll try your best to please has I will take you the American Saratoga."

"What! and shall I see my mit he!" asked the fill." Oh! that will be delightful."

The senorals brow clouded. Minerva had her had favorite with her, for she inherited some Daniel has a self-traite, one of which was a label traited block and had a traited block and troubles the old and vain so much.

"It is no treat to me," should, "to expect to her; the girl has disqueed herself and us. I can had if I have see her again."

"She will find friends enough," said the star on the "everybody admired her. Do you think if she cane been but Carlos would marry her?"

were him," said the Mancha, shortly.

"Nor I him, if I were her," muttered Althea.

her black eyes flashing.

short impatible in temeter. "I den't know but I have raine i this sleeve, you startled me so."

woman, anxiet ly, surveying the threat and trouble. "Remained that is a mething I cannot match; I would not have it spoil distribe world. But as the Sonera Min rea, she is a very procless lith. Only think of it, to run away—to bring such the upon a family like ours. I shall not be unhappy if we never see her again, though the grand will heave no means untried to find her."

While the same and the draining mill when thing there, Mineral was unwillingly an yield has in the special Deviation of the interpretable with her representational standard has been pairs to deviate the fill has been very more following the price to deviate by the attraction of the price of the particle particle and the particle parti

"I will be a sell to the complete long stellar be as her lips; "he annoys me."

Min.—th. red note that it is a red to be seen.

Diring the examing the years named as a like so it is not the early to Mineral them exact the real life early to with the result in an initial consultation with. Thus was not whelly agreed by to her. There was not a spin of coquetry in her nature, and consequently any alterative of such a character from our for when she had no construct enotions were in a high degree repulsive. At the description entertainment, he applied himself with a illity to asid I r, in fact, he confused her by the cleaness of his attention, and this confusion was by him attributed to a perily ar what tenderness for him elf. Minerva had on one or two earst is been somewhat surprised by his demean a toward har, how there was no mistaking his manner, and it gave her le at a new and regretfal pang. The next day and the hand his partleness of manner remained and increased. Manual was all a in the house, he seemed to find his great at placement in similar lesile Minerva, in listening while she sam, in d ing any lathtrivial service for her, in his mate but expression duirein. Dia seemed also to fed a great syndicity for hor harder. How was always telling of his goodness, his little prices of antiability, and sometimes she left them all not a der. The se the poor girl's situation was be ming every by more the plant. Noternthegilling that he receipt on the harmis, Dan's little all climate ways, could be an interest missable certainty, fra certainty it sport and and I -t, Marrel adda of his love in the many principal to the and entrated her to become us with International terms. prote ted would she be loner sit, ir S or Ville at L. saisal for Cuba, and would probably believe by the tra Carlos, and then his search would be in hid in His and came to his help. Than and smile were tried, grant to, and petient persistance. At lest, Mineral Call. Live her a week to deile, by that time and him her idly made upler nach Under this are a second to be entirely ther for a start space, and have a first and Shill made some new replaint to the first to one pleate companied that the a terminal She did not exet so to chither plant of a fine fit dom of American ludies was clarated to the int learned to move up at the paint of the late while see : se n mien as any of them, and ill, I the plant, during the Cuban, of being booked at and a baire h. M. arran. H. ..y.

was life reals to herelf. The was but one ils medica, to act the offer of Seper Abraha, or have the lesse. Never one did she think of returning to Haram, there to throw ler If upon the protection of her feasily. "Never," she decharly when the thought presented itself she would do that Binlatus de todo? Where to m? Anyalere to get for the leasting present that now troubled her, in a the ! Ild tar she was being watered, have been in and mi latest any ti., bediscovered and foreibly returned. She examined by But the it was very small, barely per the to protect ber be rima, its to way for a few weeks. But there were ber inciant or coll be pawned, she shallered at the therein. st. It she eyer come to that. Ye, it would be better then the priscable statenes in which sho was living. Beile, sho e il deput much on the flientship of Contin Wyllis, he I. Italiller to come to him if she were in trentle, and it was the differenth of the menth, the time his very last de-It read to be delil how showing the leave the home. Sind termined on taking only a branching poling it with tion these timportant of herel thing, and worth glassically villan Then she end el a e celanan, and having fan hil i er: there, shot all her departments a day when me the Mither to the site ware expected to be at both till the Committee to be driven to a stret minimal. I 1 : I'de was at the extrement of the city, and a or the and the street was sure the could be at the at the little s. Was a cribbly st down before a small, ment become w. . very minute sign toll that have been as were til nather. A very civil aon. It als verel le rhierle, nel slevas islend into a small part or, well fill twith old for the tree to be a first et the celling the eler of which case then the his beginning in the real contraction of the state of the the profile room was to be to be into a new point, here is to · . U. Will have the said to be will a for the to the line of the first that the line the first the fir Light we Captain Wallis well, he had taid the research betrayed her self-respect.

Harman Carlotte, the Carlotte, and the Carlotte, in Mrs. Brown's boar ling-boxe, under the assumed mane of Smith, nothing to do, only poinful ment my for a conspanion.

"It seems to me she's of the sillery sut," Mrs Brown would say; "she just spiks to n 'ely, the it I capt think it's because she cor ilers here if sup it in But Lei't she a beauty? and it's my mind, that she's son is "ereligs."

Meanwhile, Minerva pari utly walled for the opinion preturn. The fourteenth passed and the flittenth, still no tillings. The sixteenth brought Mrs. Brown to Mineral's deer, with an omingually long face. Behind her water heard since it was the good Bandola, and als! she brought sal a was; the cut in had died two days out, of yellow by r, and was burn in the ocean. Minerva telt her heart sink, this was were than all the rest; she had now no rad himle Sher it Bull la into her little room, and the two mare. Last a jet t got a The poor girl did not know what she should do now, she said, sobbingly, that she never should find so got in his sor again, and, oh! how crad it somed to the whim into the water, he who had been so kind to her! She had, she further said, engaged to go still as stewards on the salar V sol, but that was different from what things would have I in II the captain had lived.

"And I too, must do som thing, Bunkle "Sall Mingray, mountfully. "I have but a very little many 1.7, and where am I to get more?"

"Then you have hearl a thing from your har," sail Bandola, with a look of simil one.

"Nothing, it is wearing me cut," reput led Minera. "If I could only her the wort," she alled, with a line in.

"You would not so bak-why ma, and indicate part wish to know? It would be a little but I to but I to be vessel."

Minerva shook her head.

"He is of no use, I can and a look by I I I, still and thing," shoulded, with energy, "something to 1 from I can not live in this name y, it is hill be to " sympathy.

"I can at her distributed by Harright have never thought of it before. He will make inquiries for me, and at the same time keep my letter strictly private. I will write immediately. When do you suit, Ban lola?"

"In a work," the girl replied. "I can get your letter's dily to the consult of lave seen him, he came on board once, he fore our lest trip, with a little, dark Spanish gentleman, the captain called General."

"The consulty on are sure, came with his?" cried Minerva, by the style "Could it have been my uncle, Concrad Monserut ? Then they were on some business connected with his, what Herman. Do you know what they came for? what disk they do? how act? tell me."

Saw nothing more of them till they came ontagein. I hear I this ell man say, 'then it is satisfied, you will take him;' and he answer I, that he would. When we sailed, the captain was very anxiers, and dayed as long as he could. I thought he was writing for some bedy, but he must have been sick then, it he was irrited and would not say much, only that it was no use waiting any longer, and a mething about the scond time,"

"Tien, Ban lob, it was about Hermin, I am sur — oh! this some, it is terrible, what could have happened? Yes, the works, 'it is the second time,' confirm my faces, yet, what, alas! can I do but wait?"

"I wish I could help you," said the stewarless.

"You can not," replied Minerva. "I mest help mys lil"

But I had been a no but a few mements, when the hostess can rep to say that a reall man had called, and wished to so her. This amount ment throw her into a transper probasion. It was impossibly shows it, to so any one, sho was ill, she must be exerted, at all events. What if it should be Alrates! He would have no heads until 1 to trace her.

Bek came the little we man wells, her volume is a tremor, to say that the gentlement will be set so her, as his median was urgent, and most important.

"What is he like ?" a bed Merva, in a way that need the hostess look at her suspiciously.

face is in the shadow, and he don't bok up, but I am supe it is of great importance, as the gentlem at says."

"I can not go," crie l Minerva, with decision. "Oal suppose it should be Don Carlos himself?"

"Don Carlos," maranered the women, were inclined with another of her peculiar glances, "a for imagent and then I thought as much."

The poor girl knew not what step to take now, she some I to be environed with difficulties, turn which way she would, there was trouble in store for her. Neither Mileshe like the manner of her hostess at times. Was it possible she say step to be her integrity?

"I will tell you a little of my history," she will in a low, rapid voice. "I am a foreigner, and I have left relatives who oppressed me, who did not use me well. Of these I am not relative atrait, and I thought it might be, the man below stairs was one of them. I know not what to do. I must go, I suppose, but I wish to ask as a favor, that you will go with me, and remain in the room."

The woman assented, and trembling like a 1 M. Minery and depended the stairs. She took a step into the remained, almost transfixed, for before her steed in the other than S nor Vola quez, the same call stall to his lighter the same deep cumning in his eye, will it as he we did with his long, sweeping lashes.

Her next movement was one of dismay, as he came care tiously toward her, and held out his hand. He fit was it a little, but spoke nevertheless in his eminously at voice.

"I am happy to sec you, senorita."

"I-I thought you had sailed for Cula," faltered Min Am

"Such was my intention, senora, but I deliged the true thinking I might be of some service to you. How you message, senora? If so, allow meets by the burn."

"How did you find me here? and why have you can find exclaimed Minerva, her vexation retting the hoter of the prodence.

"I found you easily, senera, I had only to fill with Constitution of my heart. I came, thinking that I might by I a more. Can I see you alone, for a low to the fill to the in Spanish, booking askenson at the work of the fill.

"If you will allow it, I prefer she shall remain," replied Minerva, in the start larger of. The man frowned, but start to comply with the test grice he could assume. He then spoke again in Spani L, told her of Don Carlos' determination to sook her, of his unalterable decision to wed her, and ends I with the declaration that unless she placed herself by only his power, he would certainly find the means to possess her.

"Bu, wint shall I do?" exclaimed Minerva, frightened and pale to the shade of death.

Sara, Hove you, I am well connected, I am rich, make the hopey; as your lawful detender, you shall then have nothing to fear."

Vol. 1 in the You know my circumstances, you should pity and protect me; it is cruel in you."

"I off r to protect you," he said, his voice passion-smothered, "there is no offer way, you are young, lovely, and above. To what same ideas you not subjected? Belies, there is a like I have a Dan Corles and mys lift we are both sworn that, rs in a secret harme. Unless you are my wiff—" he in the a barry ons, "there is no safety for you. I am hound by an oath."

Man read ill back a pare or two, then her strength leaving her, she sank upon a lounge near.

Pris the and derry me, if you will," she said, at lest, her value healy with terror, "but never speak a word of love to me term. I will not hear it, you have my find answer." The proof he spoke then in the firm lip, just curved by so my in the flack of the eye, the swell of the re-tril.

It has eyes allow a least through any and every disguise, it is not new work for me."

"Not I just not," cold Minerva, her som taking words;
"year los, r los docteles been compromised more than once in a similar business. I read that in your face from the first.

There is no not for any farther conversal at allow me, to bid you good night."

"stop, smora," evel in I the man, his wild little rivid with the effect to support a the flag temp at the river 1 in his veins. "I do not oden stop to plead even of weara, but I do implore you to consider the a few more used we are a small only, the consequences of your arrest result of the residual work—by D in Culon. Your determination to resignify a certain influence—and it is more powerful than you know — any involve the liberty and even the little of others, of a point, recreating. Do not be rash, amora; do not the ray of a point, retainly. Do not be rash, amora; do not the ray of the result in the result

"Peraps I have be not bloom to what; I have been subjected. I wish in held I had a little of the peared so lovely.

"I plotter you my honor, I will be that the all I am policy of apparent sharping. For a part of the all I am and the land the land the apparent there are all the land to be a with all sites—". If the are a second the land to be a second to be a site of the area and a second to be a second t

"Oh! what shall I do?" she cried in anglish.

can I help you?"

"Dress massas read—per me into mainly alpha de monty distribution to that I am november me gricel—it would be the greatest favor."

"You up in a lit hea," muranuel the weman, stalling and glue ing men heal to flot as she spoke.

"Yes, but me dies ber mys Meest din my fice eeu toff my hair en y thing for a fey. My unele is a powerful men inch a rich man. Den Cales, chi he is terrible, and he is determined in a many me ;" she shut her eyes shuld man.

"Bath I yen de ly to conto? No mi ni who would not see you wronged?" queried the landlady.

The state of the s

The L. I, honest Mrs. Brown dil not quite conquelen little district il 1 none and manner of her now acquisit in but her hardenly is at the that was in deep trouble. In all localities, harden to the order has each for a minister—so she said now—

Sympletic are in affliction, and he prays that fervent the year had by a relative to the fine the following as if he was also in he was also in he was also in he was a lateral to the fine to God him life in he result to he are him."

While I present in the the dread of new fiers, Min rya shrank from seeing a stranger.

"No, if you place, Mrs. Brown, let me be also. And let a be also one let Brickly. If I had dream letter man we sin America, I should have jut mys Monore on my gurd —I should have confit him you. How did you know he will be a mark Diller hat ask for another name?"

The late desired promise all he ke with we you.

Yar Harling Lange 1 to do dair atly under the circumstrate in some way but I had the What Dair he can serin we will centre to Ether."

CHAPTER X.

ANOTHER DISGUISE.

The next day the stewards wish a Minerya. Frales time they consulted, and it was findly agred that Bealth was to find some out-of-the-way place, who make colli reat and furnish a small room, and Mingra, was to disting hereif as thoroughly as possible. For this purpose Burn is was sufto a store where seem brank challing was sill, to sixt what would best suit her purper. She retain I with a pina gingham frock, a long apron, a fill-1 cap, and a idea if at of grizzled hair. "There, your own father wouldn't keep you." cried the girl, chipping her hands at the transferm tilled. "Y u must only try to look old, and make some lines on your fireherl. Therefron lyou a room," she went on to say, " and I Shall firmish it to-morrow. I told the men il was for a par wilow laly, who would they for a few wells till sin west away to her relations, and so youknow how to en. Yearn prient to sew all the time, and when I come in I will borl with you. I must have in a support of goods so that you mry not go on the street mich, but out the protection change your walk and go bent over, or that i will well know."

"You have hill out quite a programme for mo," said Minerva, grateful for so much and so that ly a sixture white us put it immediately into a tion. I have to be unable to a here. But thest, my jewels must be tuned into the country in a younge to a pownbrower for metall gut them tult metall for as long a time as possible. I may be obtained to the them. And now for my letter," should be need to be unable to a consenting to the life.

At lest, with great contion and the parties of the stable linker humble lodgings. The matalogical and the stable plant A capacil large open large to be a few of figures.

Lir then her own, and the actions expression that care and the distributed her, made her seem in reality thirty years of the Herjands her being their ten pounds—they should have reduced a hardrah but Burdela was ignorant of their volve, and the broken was an unscrapalous rogue. With fifty define, however, and the little she had remaining from her than restore, Manara of the ampuratively easy in regard to the fitter—for some weeks at least. She depended upon the new that Burdela might bring her. The latter was to that her way to the consults to deliver the letter into his very hereby at to intimate the extreme caution that was needed in the case.

Frie first time, Minerva filt comparatively at ease. Show, so read of having escaped the notice of Short Velicipez, and easter Short Abrates, sho did not fear that he could attack that to be the up—he was not the kind of man to put hims to have hims a first and the repeated most important consequences.

This can was not to continue long, however. We as I -- ', and there was no news from the Buch. Every day Minister promit the paper, and at last, after a formight's del. 'ye. ithe asad time, she saw her name in the list of army a New har hearth a platty-Bantala would conveseem that prings on her way, and she branned marrily ", " by wark, save at times when the theathat that perhaps i. fri might brie bear of sarradid tilass, chamel her 'i. . ... I selled her sprits a cula. Day after day possi, Les and Dalbla came not. In sickening anxiety, Mithe meaning the last the little window that or ing literary were, and affinded a gian, or of the Lron. At lest sire roly later un the risk of a visit to the 1 1. It was not fix of, well any characters was better than The amount of deed. Atthict he relied her street decries, Sing the the building who do nwive were filled "with the feet the transaction to the long, narrow pas-- '- was at the field and the same basy working, till - particular and the first sign that greeted her ears to a the minimal that a low with shown in south. The salvas dagira at, reall softhed agers for ratios; co. 11 1 1 111, she son gin I the plant the aco plant from the shore to the tess is side, and with the resides and a besting heart, in principal of the fact that she saw, who proced to be the steward, for the captain.

"He's ashop, made," we the mater, diving the at "wait be here till to-night at ten."

man made a motion to go a., "It the structures is on board—she is a friend of mine. Can I see her?"

The man stapped instably at the collection recent over his face. He was a slightly ball to the recent over plexion and had 's his court, i. i. a. I Min realist rate of an error than ones on her form respect to the following the interest in the property stawards. Now he recall the speaker narrowly, being the real ball, a loop of the result of the speaker narrowly, being the real ball, a loop of the result of the speaker narrowly.

"Burbha, we do not be a what has be a side at "Not know what has been either?" to all Minera, slowly and in extreme surprise.

"No, maken-permential the less, perhaps yet will be introduced to hear. His a will please take as at in the calls, in a moment or two I will be at liberty."

Min real went should be the tips had given the color. It did not somether should be an it we take it had a hold on the local night past quantity has no real Copic a Well of Hammar had been by Harman yet now read in had had a hold been by Harman yet now read in had had a madely chappy it seemed! The real term of the first had had a real discount of had showledge that shows a local had been declared a stranger to a companied hysteric had been had been also as that had introduced, the second had been declared in the midst of her unit Book had reflections.

"I don't know what to the place. Dut'l "he of he "She was always he to become a least the high rate of in safety. But this the union of the first term is a least to be a safety. She was now as a second of the first term is a second of the first t not son her. Then I welked till dank in the hopes of the tingher. No, since all not be and I won by I what it ment. Thre was no god in beking, however. I met hurry back to see to supper. After a I sufthe cook one way, and I took another-no Bandola anywhere. The next dy we boked and in prired, but in vain. Well, so we waind and waited, I running everywhere—though to no use, until I give her up-no use!"

An emplatic gesture accompanied the lest word.

"But can you think of nothin "-n" P . " why she went? Did she say any thing with reference to a hely who cata prosenger in this yeard four months are, a Cuban lely?"

"Oh! yes, plusty," crie! the steward, extily. "She til mashe hals or her, mallal some laines to treat tar her. There was a reward of relto every man on bearliftis ship, and her too if we would that a classo that help. Ah! Burlole was an honerable Lid. It would have med her ill. and she knew all the time, but would not tell. Vey hower bleff and the years man check his heat and said while his face took on a profound sorrow.

Marron was planted a sin in deglet and deposit of The plot had not one I wrking yet the unit had not given ler up. She may then sopeed that British has les a watchel and tamp rel with, for slowers or distillaring would never have almaded therete. Near far her fate were now with to her producing trick-new and terible anticits. Sie are to gother heat was to full of gratio say more, though more than ear question was on her lips.

"I am s rry," she artical del-"I am very s rry. I have and trust she may be found."

"It is strong," respectful the strong, who delicant pro-It ly-but we shall try a in-I don't diplic whilly, of ili. Ling her."

Man over the continuing the venture the venture in the are a liker. It in the like ("think in Daver, the last ref the big. Mineron der bestellt raischer ber bit her ange trondiction lier to the child. As in he we have the Wis Sin Alexander the Sin the Saly hall and was a Dribberty has ween a the service of the first. For a line in the Mile nerva felt a dizzy frintness, but her effort at self-command was effectud. Senor Abrates did not notice her even by a glance. The thread-bare shawl, and antiquated bonnet, made no demends upon his feshionable attention. He passed on by her, as if utterly unconscious of her presence, and she hurried from the ship, anxious only to regain her solitude and relieve her fall heart by bitter tears. She had nearly reached the street A. where her lodgings were, all the time dimly conscious of forlowing footsteps-but her min I was so filled with her trouble that she did not stop to ask if any new danger threatend. She was now on the door-step, her hand touching the rusted latch of the wooden entrance, when suldenly her whole soul grew dark as if some awfal shadow had enveloped it in densest gloom. The footsteps had ceased. Too much frightened to look, she yet felt that there was a presence be ide her, and durting into the house, she did not pause till safely within her own chamber and the lock secured, she threw herself brathless and trembling upon her low bed. After some moments had clapsed, she went cautionsly to the window and booked out. Her impressions had not deceived her. Stanling motionless on the opposite side of the street was a tall figure, enveloped in a cloak which he handed gracefully as only a Spaniard can. At that moment he was turning away, annoved it might have been by the fixel stare of a group of children, who in their turn had constituted themselves a b lyguard of gazers, whose importinence equaled his own. Minerva knew then that Smor Velas prez had found her out in spite of her disguise. Indignation fired her blood-her p.s sion made her walk the floor flereely with clenched hands and the often released exclunation-"He shall not insalt mo thus! What right has be to invade my privacy? I will not be known-I dify him-I dely them all-I will estwit them all."

It occurred to her than to form some other plan, will she set down to deliberate. Her money she always carned with her, save a little planed away in case of emerginey. She essayed to take it from her poket. Where was her poket? She surely had it when she went out—it was reast. Looking more closely she pervised that it had been shillfully out away.—the cup of her trouble had received the one drop more. I theif had all trust I it and she was nearly penniless. No words can express the black misery with which this new and aggravating trouble fill I the mind of the friendless girl. Without money what chall she do? Where go? None to apply to, save these whose interested motives she could not fathom. Portunately she remembered that she had paid nearly a month's rent in a lyance, so that at least she should not be turned out upon the street, homeless and houseless. But the prospect before her was, oh! how dreary! Her supply of necessary food was exact lingly limited—she had been intending to replenish the meaner store, but had put it off from day to day, and now it would take nearly all she possessed to refit her larder. That night, after dark, she stole out for a few moments and houseless, and preserve her incognito at all risks.

CHAPTER XI.

THE HOME OF FARMER GOREHAM.

A plain, white farm-house, nestling down amid trees of a century's prowth, surrounded by noble orchards and fields, who were always in gentle unrest, overlooking a sparkling trout stream; in the rear the solid granite hills, with here and there silver tules of water hill along their uph sile. So he was the home of old Farmer Goreham, or as he was but a known, how stield Ben.

Nothing was wanting to complete the picturesque effect of this wouldn't home so not. The well, with its gray mosses mir, ling with trawn, and its his h-curved sweep was there; the fact a, with its to the of lites and reses; its full-see test conflowers, to while g in the summer host; its crowing heas, and the offer chirty of milk pans and case, he must be a lite with array of milk pans and case, he must be a lite with the forepass, and the eyes in sing up near and the n with dinest home intelligence; the took and the case, that and yellow, spott d with straw must of snewy whiteness; every thing by derecally, natures, and a farmer's rule we data. The reserve not all of the quaint pattern, large, hi her lied, will havily with eaken framing, and but one westler landing in medicing sight. This was the front room on the consider the during a larger of in a curp tof rich par marde in the apic and the two or three conclus, a beautiful description Williams, a beautiful description Williams, a beautiful description chairs massive and polish d. Harmilla of a bes a little Jessie Gorchum, the fair Hly of the Leadly, her will, light hair brailed about a brower's residential value, see her threeves wendering dreamily from object to eligit to eligit; her little flagers busily plying knitting n 11 s, or t . i. or the notes of the piano, ler flath r's lirth lay promit. When she play i at r the day's work was done. I range is the day's work was done, I range is form) outside of the pelleter to the best straws the, han Barchi f over his the, he his to to to be build alreging note. Honest Basto lair tall for in the was a powerfil, swarthy-brow-l, and late and their late a hard, camest worker, malusided as a ticher. Ambes of wire trees a security at a little of the lit that were born of and for equal to an intermediate le Let with his duly strip. His was the cold to eath I a contine helplike whence, the second to be the in the gradile ties, and motionally the form to an and an extreme the form to the first beath. They had be true cided to a Jerical Here, at it in pride, and their great teaching the inter-

It was a placed to that his just the terminal server.

Mrs. Goethan was malking this to lythe address the aly pears, all put up in his later as which is drill it as a.

at the head wealth mean interpretable provides a provide the provi

"I'll do so," said the girl.

"And don't be applied by the section of the section

"Yes 'm," said Sarah, demurely.

In the derivity, we have property to the least, steel desired by the latest of the lat salness in check and eye. The mother, as she looked at them, grew sad also, even to tears, for she took out her handkerchief, and silently wiped her eyes.

"There he is," said Jessie, in a low, almost broken voice.

"And no letter, I fear, from our poor boy," said hourst Bon, as he watched the motions of the coming lad with early eyes.

The boy came nearer—bun! ha letter; the fither took it, and shook his head as he sighed, "Not from Herman."

"And nearly five months," murmured the farmer's wife, gently.

"Yes, nearly five months since we began to wonder whether the poor boy were deal or alive. Well, Heaven give us strength."

"We thought so much of him," muse I the fon I mother.

"If we could hear aught—but this dreadful uncertainty," grouned the farmer

"Terrible! and in that place where they strangle men with the garotte, for no offense but that of loving liberty," sight I the wife, in response.

Jessie had crept into the parlor, and opened the lately unused instrument. As she touched the familiar chord, har hands trembled, and the tears rolled down her pale checks.

"I can't bear to hear it," sail the old farmer.

"Nay, father, let the child alone; it soothes her. She fools the loss as keenly as either of us," pleaded his wife. "Ask her to play for us; it will cheer her up, poor little thing; and he loved music—why should not we? Play, Jesse, play, dear," she called, through the opendoor; "one of thy father's favorites, my child." So Jesse sat there, and, by the mean-light, played a fely all her foliar's favorite harmonics.

The great corn reclock in the entry strack nine, when there was a hurried knock at the door. It was the post-boy again.

0

"I know you were looking all the time for letters he maway," he sail; "and so, as this come in late, I made bely to bring it."

The form r thankel him. His great, brown hands transbled as he took from the case his diversimm days tad a national family lower the later long before his eyes read day a faHe dreaded to read the superscription. Alis! he was doesned again to disappointment. The hand was ferdininely delicate; it was post-marked New York. He throw it on the table, and turned away impatiently.

"Oh, father, won't you real he? What hautiful writing!"

cried Jessie.

"No, I don't want to read it. It's an order, likely, for fruit or butter—it's nothing that I want to see."

"Bujumin, Benjumin; the must be more recencil, "sail Mrs. Corchan, who, having ben transit up a Frint, used the larguese of that seet whenever she filt straigly excited.

"May I read it, father?" asked Jessie.

"Yes, read it, child, read it."

Jessie opened the latter, but she had sour signed the thet dozen lines, when she uttered a great cry of joy.

"O mother! O father! it is of Herman after all. So wonderful! still he's not found; but show it! stop. I'll real it, you'll be so a tonished—perhaps so it 'rist l—I dealt know; it's very sal;" and thus, alternating truncing to pain a shocommenced what follows:

Mas. Gorman-Der Meter: I filt towally a the emotions of a daughter when I first heard my Herman quirdon me, but in life or death he is still miss, speck of the virtues of his sweet mother. I should not the the library of addressing you thus, though probably my name is not new to you, were I not driven to the direct nessity. Yours at took passage for himself and me in the bark Harb, from Caba; put me on board, and then returned for a media; reant mate ters left behind, and I have not some him, a liber hord from him from that day to this. Where he is, he while with, God only knows! to that Great Birst I have will be him, and await patiently the result. I am an in the intermedian my family, who have conspired erally to mit me with a man for whom I have neither affect ner even et. m, and I dare not return, for I am certain the will purpose that has been the aim of their lives would be put in execution. There are spies surroundle ; une, so that I am une of the a sector of wearing a constant and discretification, and of a under that I flar I am recognized. I must tell you the whole of my mi rable story I have begun. I have thrown my dr on your kindness; I must not shrink, however pride may counselme. I am compelled to add, that I have not now, and have not had, sufficient food to sustain life comfortably. I, who have all my life had delicacies at my command, am Starving; my only food and drink has been a little dry bread and water. There, it is told; my trembling flagers have performed an unwilling task, but what could I do? If it were not for the hope I have of seeing him once more, I would give way to binting nature, and die; but my faith forbills, and counsels me to take every needfal precaution to sastain life. May I come to you, if only for a while? I should have been the happy wife of your son, if ill fate had not intervened. I can scarcely guille my pen for weakness and dizzine, and can only add, that, if on Thurslay you will come, or sond for mefor I have no means—you will find me at a secer's on the corner of A---- and L--- streets.

Very truly yours,

MINERVA DE MONSERATE.

"The poor child?" cried the farmer's wife, tears in her eves.

"Isn't it terrible, mamma?" marmure! Jessie, her fair face treathd, and her large eyes distended; "it makes me shiver from head to foot to think of any one suffering, actually a firm for want of food, and only think of our abundance."

"Well, what would you do, mother?" asked the farmer, hastily.

"Do? take her home here, the poor chill; take her right have. Do you go after her, father? she shall find rest here; tank! she would have been the wife of our dear boy." Here the motherly heart gave way, her voice faltered and tell; she arose, and hastily left the room.

"And Herman used to write such beautiful letters about her," said Jessie; "how I long to see her. He told me I should love her, and I know I shall. Pather, is it not strang? What can we do to find Herman? We must go to Cale, father; we must search from one end of the i land to the Other." Her beautiful eyes were bright and leantly with tears.

"Yes, yes, child; but if they have put him cut of the way—these Spaniards are devils when their the distant is het," he said, butkily; "I wish he had staid at hanc, the part by."

While they were thus talking, Minery as at in the Universital solitule of her own room. Candle she had a no, but the moon shene now and then with a brightness that per trainle even into the somber corner, and played about her per a pule face, with its white Eps, and haming eyes. Every day for nearly a month she had known that the probling Spaniard walked to and fro before her door, as if it a listly to into the that go where she would, he should keep grant, and he in realiness to deliver her, if persille, into the hands of her uncle. This unmainly surveilled seem the part of her paid after the had worn upon the per girl, till she had be moralled stones elected, and the weat of preper field, alled to her extent mental anguish, threat help prestrate her with a large and dangerous illness.

On withe man hal writen to her - de hal flang his letter in the fire. So res of times he had attempt if to see her, but she was resolute, and had never all tel him to enter her door. Week and despoining, she had given up have and hooked forward to death with busing, Seelal com, who the Allian of hunger was then her, revolved in her mid the dulinent modes of street, and on she had a taily detained some charceal, and closed har done is and which as, in the expectation of patting on out to be nucleing the ter-It is strange how often, by the markst counce, the contact plan tion of a crime be messall aly as lamid as It had but re section plansit. The single for all as his ill a int. sent at the middline by an ever in the in . while a hein of oup, with the main a come that a let the with the hely lake lill, and ward raining, while the contact of a relating. The air of the reason and the and hat; its darkers to and aller, and Min . . . . I am to the there is trance, mind to the with the are, in a time of the breath long name dar to as associated to the terminate I'd mir, materimerica, "I van it dat, Faller, torus tall being has to bear the barin till tient shall see the recent the This little pray regard her a reliable for men single al and comforted by the nourishmen', she still firther supplicated that the Abaighty would deliver her from the power of her opplessus, and along helion a containty that in some way help was on to come. That all morn she everlooked her slender war irobe. Noticing that there was some rattling stationer in the pocket of an apren, she drew out an old letter, one she recognized immediately as having been written by Herman while he was at his hotal. "Stratora"—the name she had tried so often and so vaidly to remember. An impulse seized her, of which she determined to take instant a l-Vantage. She would write a letter to his home-to his mother, and throw hers if upon their presention. The idea was as sublenly act d upon, the lettr writen, and ant as contiously as the could manage it, and now she gave latself time to think. What the result would be, sheddlest dereins, inc. Sanding she was lewill relation beque; again, feating that she might be deem alon importor, but he art such; but be as it might, she believed that in some way deliverance would Come.

The third day, early in the memory, do dressed herself in her wented heldt, and, taking a rewentides with her, set out on her promised errord. The man at whee shop she retel of all he a chair, recalling that she haled weary. He hals en her blire, and don't the thought her appearance as randle black was maight, so singular was the black of I than be in her countenance—the gray hair, the here ", of the ministrates, and the bright young eyes and li, and though not blooming. Trankling, even shivering as one had a my she sat hear the warm smileht of an Angust day, whitee, dr. line, heplacent at all, hoping! At the South time to the witter the located New it was the balance and a second and a second after all harder in die, was the total today; into ht? Program I that Jors a war on, course, distant by a back as a surgical is a Chaly-drawn releasy-based and halfe, and topp l. Pr Mirrille exects well as the chill have the I discly. That for -- ties han begin, I make, his lly for, an the the sais. Oh! she call have higher ir very jay. It must be for her.

" Is the read by walting have to be with all towns

"Yes, yes," cried Minery, experty; he turned, at histori, glancing at her narrowly, I do I at the small, white head, now ungloved, smiled as he gave another a ratializing a doubt the oldish bonnet and the old face, and class I the little fingers in his, locking his Tps together. His eyes shows a piciously, his lips trembled as he said. "Are part all ready?"

"All ready," she replied, low and brokenly.

From come," he drew her arm in his, so the life is if he had been twenty-one, and she a bill, as is I her into the wagon, and drove off at a brisk pare. The hand I foun was free, at least for the present.

CHAPTER XII.

TWO ARRIVALS.

The minutes had not elected, when a limit for earry all, drawn by an impation, high, the left has, it we also up to the grocer's store. A man does thin a form ris self of arry, with long hair, that daught have the his her in all ring skeins, keen, dark eyes, chees I by ham specially and earlied the store.

"Is there a lady walting here to a the control he inquired, hastily, after a quick scrutiny.

"You're too late, old nearly and "will the burners in a line to with the Cother old read, and he are the result of the contract of the contrac

"How long has she by a grant in the law, with

"Well, it may be half and not all the paint of the remark their election is all I carried at a first and their election is all I carried at a first a first than before.

"So much for the curs I be thut," that the little term, as Le walked to the ther, and make I first my a life much the start. "Title return shart I little - h, jetter dy the s longer, she would have been in my possession, now it remains to head her off in that direction, and that will be difficult."

As he said this to himself, he had sprang into the vehicle, showing a row of teeth, glittering and white as milk, will'e Lis upper lip, shorn of a recent mustuche, proved by its quincring jorks, the aritation of his mind, and the fierceness of his temper.

Meanwhile, the gray had cleared the lower part of the city, before the old farmer turned his attention from the prospect before him. Then, when they were past all danger, for the horse was spinited, and pricked up his cars at the sight of a builty or railroad track, he said, pointing to the bottom of the carrier, "There's a little basket there, mother put me up a f a sechwicker and cakes, for, to tell you the truth, I started without my breakfist. Perhaps you will help me eat them, it's not so pleasant to eat alone."

Min ava thankel him, blessing him in her heart for his the children and d lieucy, the ing him for the food, for six was hungry.

"I must book strain to you, in this dish paring dress," sho sul, and as she spite, she like him the hound, cup, and fallhar hen her hal. He own curls fill on the instant in this, may along her face, that now, divided of spations, the and white and thin, was still youthed, and very leastiful.

"I'relild!" sail the old man, and there he passed. The lest crowd for his soul, Herman, his face exultant with lave terl tri miph, seemed at the moment, shallow-like, to sit is the his betrothed.

"You are al," be alled, a moment after, contribut in felines; "how my h you must have suffred! but we'll seen grayon up a sin in our good country-sir, clear and brasin, and my little Je sie longs to welcome you as a sister."

"Oh, ye, little Jeste," married Minerva; "le usel to the other. How I doll have ber!

"I want to talk with you about my boy, when we wan Lend," will the firm r; "I cult do it in the noise of the rather where. But, periode, Hy or have front it mere and towar your dirie, it is not probate to take it off now, then the the are on the rail to the country."

"It somes plant to be the fron the odias this," said Minerva, childshidy; "but I will replace it, and childshit myself with the beautiful fields, the clear swed by Z, ch! how sweet!" She sink back in the carriage, and let her eyes rove delightfally round. Here, for the time, was proceeding content. Herman's fether had bellevel ler, she was belle him, how strong and beautiful he seemed! and, chi! to be folded to his heart and called daughter! was that this did that ever to be? should she who had be a denied so ber, know the blessings of a parental love? Quietly she sat there, to happy even to think, wanting to cry cut with all her hat at the fresh beauty of the searlet thorn-harry, and the clusters of ripening barberries, that made the rall like a pi ture, at the yellow hay stacks in the flells, flinging invisible consers of performe, at the cottages and farm-yards, bugling to bredit with an almost infatile glow, as she the the git of S a T Vel aquez, pacing back and forth, the solic astimal smire or r an empty room. Little she dreamed her neur she built a to falling in his hateful power, but the space of this a minutes ago.

That morning was one of excitement in himself, of the pleasant farm-house. It had been impossible for he ast B a to eat the nice breakfast, so neatly prepared by his wife, and Jessie was fluttering from mether to father, restless all a state tears. She did cry a little, when her fathers a cort, and said, with her last kiss, "Bes reach bring her, father."

Her mother so ing that she grew in one notions as the civilwore on, plumed that she should carry some Peterd II. y to the sick lady at the hotel, and put up for her some of her choicest fruit. Mrs. Wise had been an early in a left Mrs.
Gorelam, and in her said illusts had while had he is at hor.
Jestie was an especial favorite with the side means, and so loved to see the bright, young for in her lational factors.

Jestie was there perhaps an hour. She can be not bright of news.

"Mother, what do you think?" she wouldn't her will eager, her eyes shining; "who do you think he will the hotel?"

my daughter," was the quiet reply.

"Yes, a granted with a local trans. I special profile in Cuba, and there's no telling how rich he is. They say such quantities of baggage as he has brought, and so many servants! I saw a chariot myself, or rather, Mrs. Wise called it a / ' / 5, open; and the harne's clittered with silver and gold, and there was a negro sitting on one of the horses, I declare I never saw such a splendid uniform—and—"

"Livery, my child," said Mrs. Corcham.

"Oh, yes! well it was as brilliant as it could be, and such horses! I thought fother's gray was the han bomest horse I ever saw, but these are both milk-white, two beauties. Then there's a sister, I haven't found out yet whether young or old, and a very handsome Spanish gentleman, Mrs. Wiee, says, though she don't like his eyes."

"Well, and what does it all amount to?" asked the mother, not at all dazzled by this chum ration.

"Why, nothing-that is," sail Jessie, slowly, hesitating as she wound the blue strings of her hat round and round her finger; "of course they are people of distinction and wealth, enormous wealth, Mrs. Wise says."

"But there are a great many people of wealth and distinc-tien, here," said Mrs. Goreham.

"Yes, but nebody has made such a sensation, so Mrs. Wise rays; enginely is talking about it, and he has engaged almost a whole floor, two parlers, three or tour bedrooms, and two or three rooms lesides. They have their breakfist carried up to them, for I suppose they feel thems lyes too good to est with the rest of the boarders. Mrs. Wise says, she heard that they carried their priest with them, for they are all very plous. Oh, dar! how I should like to see them?"

"Some one is coming, I shall like to see far better," said Mrs. Gerelam, rising and shaking out the folks of her dress; her quick ear had detected the seaml of coming wheels,

"Oh, patience, me! yes, I'd almost forgotten," said Jessie, with the life; "I wonder who she will look like? I wonder if I shall like her? Oh, dear!" and her little face fell a da; "these great people can from Caba. I alm'st hate the name, but, parhaps, why, who knows, but they may help us, flend Herman?"

Mrs. Gordam smiled saily at the ludierous idea. That these grandes were in any way connected with the fate of her boy, a plain farmer's son, never remotely cocurred to her mind.

The wheels were nearer; even father's voice ould be heard speaking to the boy who tended the rate. The mother fell back a little; Jessie grew very solomn as the carriage came in sight. At first only the partly time of the farmer was visible, and Jessie was ready to cry out with disappointment, but in another moment it was plainly to less in that a woman occupied the seat behind.

Minerva had disengaged her unconcely disguise before showas handed out. The flight of expectation crimean labor cheeks—her eyes were eager, large, and bright as dianously.

"See what I've brought you home," said the old farmer. His wife received the stranger with open arms, kiss it her fondly, pressed her hand with carnest late. Justing the rarm around her, thinking to herself, "Oh! I. will add it! I'm sure I shall love her dearly!"

"Take her right up-stairs, Jesie, daughter," said her mother, gazing with yearning for lines on the gentle girl for her son's sake, and when she has rested both of you come down to breakfast.

It seemed like heaven to Minerva after her pais n-like life, thus to be brought into genial sunshine, and ng simple, kin lly hearts. She looked around the large chambers is a paintly clean—everywhere only white, from both mathers to the life resting in clear crystal or the mantel-piece. Such late that he are were no lawns, no fount ins, no errorance tall manuals, but the handiwork of the great God, granter than all the large of men, was stamped upon crowned hills, and the U. and amber skies.

"This is rest," she said to Jossie, who was as fully of the as she could be in gozing her fill at the Loudy stade of the won lering so heartily where Herman could be. And when they went down-stairs to the simple liver is spined on the fore them—the fresh honey, the stanged liver is spined on the breakfast cakes, Min roa thou ht she had never some some elegance. Meantime, the former and his will also reasons together about her, had determined that she had a side had as possible, and that every means must be form to restore the field bloom to her check. That even is, the throws held a long con-altation with her. He dil not dare to tell either her or his wife that he had just heard how a vess l had been wrecked off the coast of Cuba, at or near the time that Herman Lad intended to sail.

CHAPTER XIII.

DORA'S PROPOSITION.

S. Sign Abretti, w. P. of the floor impatiently. His arms were the limit from a to hope in from a at every step. His per lister relief upon a ceach as was her wont, idly toying with her fan.

"Cerry, Marris, jet a carriage and give me a drive," sie He windy, little has little from the mes of silken velvet.

"In hit in the meet is radrive," we the reply.

"No-lesp is about You never are in a mood for a direct in any thing the monadies. I more serventha supplicates yet have grown to be periody mulish-no. or yes, to every thing, a thing more. For my part I wish Ma-I was Mary rate had not better there there your horse's heels, I The state of the "Bed it, D: - you tell foolishly."

"It ik tarih, and you know it. Fie, there are a dozen here's regulation side. I could point them out this mintre Ceni Brains, who were a perfect Jane, in compari-Man and Hall and the state of the Hall of the Lange her all and the head of --- "Simple (City) light in the restrict.

"I : .!! II(+t) ki who you think you are talking to, series of District series and section of district, series does not know what she is talking about, who can not quite read the thoughts even of her own brother."

"So foolish, too, that she can't be trasted with any of her brother's troubles," said Dora with some pique.

"Why should I burden you?"

"You needn't; tell me what your trouble is, and I'll haigh it out of you," she answered.

"The troubles of a grown man are not so easily hagh leff, my wise little sister," was the reply.

"Well, at venture, I'm certain it's about that Monsorate," she said.

.

"It's about two or three Monsorates," was his rej in her.

Dora sat bolt upright now. "Why! at the yearing to give you any trouble because she was here?"

"Not unless that so-ding Veleguz in lile-lut he will."

"Oh, yes; he owes you a grudge."

"He owes me a dozen."

"Well, what can he do?"

"That's just what I don't know.

"But we needn't return to Cuba this year, at last, if we don't wish; they could hardly trouble us."

"But they are here."

"What, the great general here, in New York!"

"No-the little general with the great name to New York city, but in Saratoga."

"Oh! at Saratogn! I won by if he will marry dry one from there?"

"A woman - a woman !" cried S n r Abrat s, so it i listingers.

"Psicus!" ejaculated Dara, with a lake it material in that's your cry, always. But I see—Velegational in it them you loved her and have sort ther; it introduce trouble, especially as we have what trails fill of her chothes."

"And he will, if I can fall no wey to prove in it do you suppose she is?"

to ask me that question."

a I have sometimes thought that perhaps she grew tired of life," mused Dora

a No, there were no in licetions of such a thing," regil I Manuel; "she love! that fillow who des ried her too well," he added with unusual bitterness.

"And Manuel, I have just thought," said little Dora, with an air of importance and a very solemn face; "how can we tell but S nor Velasquez has spirited her off and perhaps married her himself."

Minuel presel saddenly in his walk, struck by her worls. "In ver thought of it, and he is so finished a villain, too, I wish I was certain of her fate," he continued, traversing the Il or again. "At any rate, my conscience is clear. I have tri levery methol I know of in vain; she has bathel me," he sighed heavily.

"I'll tell you what to do, Manuel."

"Well, what?"

"Go to Saratoga."

"Yes, to show you off, he half laughed, half sneered.

"I have a fancy to see the general, and oh! if that magnificent Don Carlos has come, about whom I have heard so nanh-what would I not give to have a look, at him? But that is not all," she hurried to say-"the step will disarm them of suspicion—they certainly could not believe that you would leave such a woman in New York, alone."

"There is something in that," sail her brother.

"Then a win, it may be that Miss Minerva stole quietly to Crin, repending of her misters, and for reward, they have brought her to Saratoga."

"Your imminition is fertile," was his reply.

"Sill, yet can not say that it might not be. Women have in the ir minds from time immenorial. I should like to a ler. I never met with any one who interested me so I. I. of successive. If I were you, I'd meet this rich Cuban more than half way, or else he may demand an explanation, and with correction with new meter you appear rather foolishly."

Month both lattle derinationshment. He hal never Ly man in to be so y duble on any subject but dues, and now her units and the my amorbit with them that was by no means to be despised. He did not know that grafflention of self was her main object, and that nothing is more likely to call for cloquence than a plea for our own wants, a recital of one's own wrongs or pleasures.

"It strikes me that we will go to Saratoga," said Marriel after some moments of thought. His heart leaped at the lare supposition of meeting Minerva Monserate. He leads her with a true and fervent passion that threatened to be as lasting as it was sincere.

Dora exulted inwardly. To see Stratoga, was the clients of her traveling ambition. She had beard exegger to be counts of its fashions, its resorts, its occupants, and her with little heart fluttered at the possibility of the sons then and the conquests she might make. Visions of rich dress sort to be out before her imagination; she was as ambitious as Statist Moncha herself. It was soutled that in three days at the lost they would start for the fur-functivation; place. Monthmy, Manuel engaged rooms.

CHAPTER, XIV.

THE CUBAN LION AT SARATOGA.

A picture of in-lolence and high-life almost unequaled. A long private parlor, gorgeous with upholstery, some of which is imported expressly for the use of the occupant. The high is imported expressly for the use of the occupant. The high is imported expressly for the use of the occupant. The high lows, rich with learnings of gold-embroidered lace. A win lows, rich with learnings of gold-embroidered lace. A long of crims in velvet, drawn up to the central casement, to the limit there is in voluptions elegance, Don Carlos, Noting could be more splential than the oriental magnificant e of his costume; it is an emulation of princely expenditure. It dishes if he lifts an arm as if embroidered with gems, then. It dishes if he lifts an arm as if embroidered with gems. The light trembles from shoulder to hem if he but moves, The light trembles from shoulder to hem if he but moves, and and arm as pipe, gold-mouthed, and falling in many serpentine folion, is gracefully suspended from his lips. His smoking cap is of mossive gold trail, with perhaps here and there a jewel to the city of its points. He is the king of loungers, this Don Carto, with unbounded wealth—this heir to luxury.

He has been out to day, but no languid and well-dressel Elinwas Lurelby a sout at his sile in the beautiful vi-I. . It has not yet come to that. The Don uses his gold, In anthony and then, drawls "rather ling," and that is all. His selfish heart is steeled against britte eyes-the charmer's cherm in vain. He is watched three holes I shutters—watched stealthily through half-open des. The young dellings go into extasies over him-his wala, his air, his low, his smile, all are perfection. Decide lly le le the lin of Saratoga. And then there is such a romantic story going the rounds, how he is breaking his heart for s in the property of the military was to a Lit - programme to the state of the service of the in him share. As I that dear little oblining hely! did you to the large of the Every day some which is the plaint for the recently the and the nicht step cities that of rather arms and bosoms of the fair Americans. What yellow glunces some of those women be tow upon them—deeper them even the chronic jaundice-tinge of the wonderful webs. As for dresses, the ladies might search their war holes in value and any thing that will approach their maryclousness. See is an object of envy in spite of her diminutive tace, and program wrinkles. Even the gold-mounted fan is a talisman in Ler hard. Who could hope to approach that suffer memory is that makes every motion a word? And so that is the anatof the magnificent don, they say, and her dimen als fuirly blind one.

Don Carlos still smokes and leannes. On an intall tills near are the evening papers, which, by their runn; I happers ance, he has probably consulted. By an I-by he had a substiling, and calls his valet, who is in an over room to pull the bell-rope. Marques is a small, yellow man, very heads a significant touch, and retires gracefully. One of the servants of the house appears.

"Call my waiter," says the don, with an air.

Presently the waiter, a thoroughly block neuron dress like white, enters, bowing obsequiously. Den Carles prince to the little gift besin in which his piperests; it needs a place is like. The waiter, with another service inclination, part that his instance ter's billing. This only to give an insight into the prince habits of the Cuban lion.

A little back General Monserde entrel, problem land perfumed.

Well, guarly," said the young near, turning king it was the near threw his delicaten and the interest in the white the analysis and the property what have you been doing to-day?"

"No resty any thing of important," was for a pilet "I all waiting to gather up my forces—we are multiple unimportant now."

"Are we?" quaried the din, largetilly, cation his option his dresing gown; "well, that is what we cannot be larget know."

"I don't see as we got any nearer to the matter in hand. This story Velas prez rejeats in his last letter, heaves as where we were before."

" You mean that Abrates has concealed her?"

" Yes."

"Married her, perhaps," said the don, in an undertone, his face growing gray.

" Perhaps."

"It he has!" murmured the young man, between , teeth.

"What can you do?"

"At least, kill him," shouted the don, with ferocity.

A servant came in and handed the general a note, then disappeared.

"Ala!" cried the general, as he read; "this brings news.

Some Velasquez is below-stairs."

Da Carles started bedt upright.

"Let him come up immediately," he said, taking an easier attitude.

It was not long before the door opened, and a tall man, in the dress of a clergyman, entered. He was smoothly shaven, wore his hair low upon the forehead, and spectacles of a greenish color distributed his eyes. Both the general and the don expressed by their glances the utmost astonish-11. i.t.

"We had boled for a friend," said the general, frowning at this intrusion as he considered it.

"And not for an interleper," alled the don, haughtily.

The incomer was shent, but with one movement his shining the k heir was the san buck, and the spectacles dis-] . . . 1.

"Senor Velasquez!" clied the general.

"Hab! of him!" greated the don, laughing heartily.

"Where in the world did you study theology?"

"My the lary all can out of your books," sail the sener, smin, at he scatel himself. "So you did not know me; I was cutting on the million. I thatter myself that few can earry cata assistant relation and Well, Intalations ved Sayor the last to follow my adder, and come l. :e in person?"

"We allowed the dictates of our own judgment," sail the d n, more coolly. "I intended to come from the first; a slight in his perion presented me, however."

A lurking smile grew deeper on the thin lips of Sener Velasquez.

"Well, what's the business?" asked the don, hying his corly pipe a ide. "What have you found out—what do you know?"

"I have by letter given you a precise account of my doings up to the present time," said the senor. "I have now only to exonerate Senor Abrates; she escaped him, as well as myself."

"How do you know?" inquired the don.

"I have seen her," was the reply.

"Where? when?" crie! Don Carlos, excitelly.

"Patience, my dear friend," said the senor, sattly; "I will tell you the whole story. For some reasons, probably of haportante, Smorita Monarate I ft the house of Sant Alardus. I tracked her to a common boarding house, where she had tal a recoms under the name of Smith. For some time I watched her, waiting for an opportunity to surprise her; but before that could happen, she had changed her name again, and her lodgings. For weeks I tried in value to obtain an interriew with her. I have waited patiently before the herein which she was, for hours at a time. I have traited her to stores and the post-office, but she was too coming for in. I have every reason to suspect that she knew me. One illy I saw a boy go from the house with a letter. I kn with a that she would not venture out. I followed the loy and over the Lim. I wished to see the letter—he was not to be the at . 1. I bribed him; he carefully unscaled it, for the sold was jet wet, and, for a half sovereign, allowed me to real it. It was a plan for flight. On a certain day she was to need the bare to whom she had written, and place herself under his price. tion. Thus forewarned, I thought I might establisher. I distrined a country suit and waren, and should as it ly bare been successful, but for the breaking of my shalls in gring down-hill. The accident delived me nearly half and wit, and I was in the vicinity of no other carries. What I arrive: there, she had gone. If I had found ber-" he passed have but "you would never have seen her," given I in his coult eye.

"Too ball" must be the day making as if he wail walk; then changing his mind, throwing himself down again, where he crou hed with folled arms, deep in thought.

"Hal you no clue in the letter by which you might trace her?" asked the don, excitedly.

"I certainly had," was the reply.

"Well, well; where was it?"

"I have gone beyond the bounds of my contract already," replied Senor Velasquez, evasively.

"Pive him is ded distant for the information," said Den Car-

. -; i. h., with a sheer, "you make money on me."

"That's the way I live," was the reply.

" Fil give you a clock, nov, for the information."

"Well, then, she is at this mement not a hundred railes from this hotel," was the crafty reply.

"I then he exclaimed Den Carles, springing up.

"But where-where?"

"That I must first find out myself," replied Senor Valus-The great steation is necessary, now, for she is with powerful filends. In this dispuis, however, I hope to suc-C. I. You have, of court, tiven the production of civing another name on the books?"

"Ys," rilled Dan Cales; "the general assumes the Lar Amala, and I that of Don John-ha! ha! My venerely will, who had the lib my of choosing her own a lig-7 (is Dona Margrerita -- quite fanciful. Our s reacts are diffied, so there's no thar, unless the laly sees our projous faces."

"The is all well; in my ministerial character, I flatter mysittem saved in reaching her presence. This meth I Lavel areel, that she is in a large form that is very favorably in the the purpose of ablastica; for it must, I flar, emp to be at less. Leave me alone to maraze by what artal e I called a respect purpose. In the mean time, we are to Lie two mer of our film's here, Sener and Sen its Abrates."

"How do you know that?" inquired the don.

"To it many are book a Labort doubt but that they will be here to-day." "I be a miner the little and the invest Den Callet a sign Was a promy horizontalian, and quite took my farry. Of the ferent stuff from Senorita Minerva, she would allow caresses; while my little playmate (a shadow crossed his forehead), what a life she led me! But I will show her yet whose turn it is to be master."

CHAPTER XV.

THE VISIT TO WASHINGTON.

Minerva was now comparatively at peace. Honest Ben was preparing for a journey to Washington. He had always promised Jessie that if ever he visited the capital of the nation, she should accompany him. A brother of the old farmer held a seat in the national legislature, and he had often expressed a hope that the old man might come on, and bring Jessie, to get acquainted with her cousins, whom she had never yet seen. Jessie was all in a glow of hope when she heard her father's proposal, but dared not appear too anxious, lest it might not seem quite courteous to their new friend; but when her father said, "Well, Jessie, what do you think about going with me?" she exclaimed, "Oh! I should like it above all things."

"But it will not be quite polite to leave Miss Monserate alone in this old farm-house."

"Don't regard me a moment," said Minerva; "I beg you will not. I should feel quite unhappy if Jessie staid at home for me. Go with your father, my dear Jessie, and God prosper his mission."

"I'll raise heaven and earth but what I find something about my boy," exclaimed the old man, fervently.

His wife's eye glistened with a tear as he said this, though at the same time she gently rebuk. I his vehemence.

"Well, J. sie," she said, stooping over her fondly, "father go 3 this day week; so get ready."

Never bird flew more cheerfully about its nest, than Jessie around the house, gathering up her little finery. There were purchases to be made; a hundred dollars were put in Jessie's little han is, at which she looked in unfeigned astonishment.

"I shall not want half of this," she said; "only thinkone handred dollars! it seems so much to spend at one time."

Min rya laughed quietly. "I used to give more than that for one dress alone," she sail; "but as I look at it now, after having wanted for a dollar, it does not seem right to spend money that way."

"More than that for one dress!" exclaimed Jessie; "why, pray, how much did that cost?"

"Oh! it cost three hundred and fifty dollars for the material alone. It was what they call a kincob, of East Indian manufacture; thick silk, worked all over with gold thread. But my uncle paid for all these things. I remember his getting me a muslin once, so very fine that it looked like a web, and, in fact, when wet, could not be seen at all. It was very emporate and be artiful."

"Why! how wealthy your uncle must have been!" exshrill cant.

"Yes," Minerva reglied in her quiet way; "he was, I expect, immensely rich."

"And so is this old Cuban general at the hotel." Jessie turn I quite pule. She had been forbid len to mention the arrival in the presence of Min rva.

The latter land a lup a startled query in her eyes. Seeing the confusion in Jesse's face, her white lips trembled out the question—"For heaven's sake, what do you mean, my friend? A Cultur general in Saratoga? Then it must be my uncle. He has found that I am here. Oh, where shall I go now?"

At that mement the farmer's wife entered. Seeing Minerva dis har I with her daughter's thoughtlessness,

"Was your uncle's name the same as your own?" she

"Yes, M. neurate-General Limenes de Monserate," said the trembling girl.

"Then make yourself easy, for that is not the name. This Johan. Father went to the hotel, last night, so do not treable yourself. Besides, if it had been your uncle, he would in all probability have rented a cottage, and kept himself in strict privacy, no, I do not think it is."

Somewhat reasured, Minerva voluntered to aid Jest it her needlework, for the time was short, and there was not he to do; but throughout the day, at intervals, the si kining thought would recur, that perhaps she was within the read of her enemies, and she shuddened at the soul of carrier wheels, however distant, or at the treal of a function and on no account could she be left a moment alone. The haptersion hel more than once crossed her mind that the man comers were really her uncle and the don unler assistant names, and she felt at times an almost irrepressible design to se for herself, to know and be prepared for the wart. The days went on as usual, however, Minerva allowed here If but limited recreation, and was then always accompanied by the farmer and his daughter, besides Brano, a splendid New Finds land dog, to whom the lonely girl had become strucky attichel, and who seemed to reciprocate her addition. The farmer had made arrangements with his head far har to be move to the house with his wife while he should be an and it. gave him strict charge respecting the years? Collar girl.

It was the sabbath, the next day the farm r was to start for Washington, and all things were in realises. The tranits strapped and locked, were in the hall. Jessie's test List traveling suit, with its little linea collar and sievel at la lay in the space-chamber on the bed, all really firth rotting berself into. Jes is was looking very grave as she enter the curiare to go to church; it made her think of that proive journey so near at hand, but when she care here. The was marvelously teleative. There was a minister in the pale pit, she suit, a handsomedooking man, only be were a h aliers green spectales, and after church, he spit to ber t ther, and asked him if he had not a sol, a your give, perhaps twenty-four or five. "You may have a both f il "alled Jessie, volubly; "he answerd, "Ye, at he in erself jut real, treep. The minite the new attent that he know febrily his read likens, and that le had core to remember Herman, for he saved his life when they to be ther in a steamer, cruising among the West India I i.e. 's. You know Herman has been everywhere," she all-", t raing to Minerva, who listened with breathless interest. "Well, he went on to say, that he had a terrible attack of challen was then raging in several of the islands, and that Herman steed over him a whole night and a part of the not decamble was owing to his unremitting exertions that by was now alive. You can't think how father grasped him by the Lind, and I do believe he couldn't speak for wanting to erg. Then he tell about H rman, and the man elenched is total to which, and do by d that he would suffer any thing irthe year mer, that mable, self-criticing young man, he call him. He and what he could do, and told father to e a .. a. I him in a sy wey. Father asked him to dinner, but I sail Mr. Calbron, 'our minister,' she alled, turning to Wiserva, "had invited him to day, but he would call on you, :. ther, this week, he has ever so many little ancedotes to tell about that 'noble young man.'"

"I shall be very glad to see him," said her mother, gently; "er eny one that can give me any news of my dear boy."

The day possed placently, and the half-joyful, half-dreaded Manlay half-cone. Jessie's little heart was so full, that her has taking was quite morrish, while even the good farmer's "take our of yours II," as he touched the lips of his wife, and in and the bent of his must, was almost in a libbe.

This the famous wife and Minerva were quite alone till in. Then expect the pardener, a stout, burly man, with a suite as stout, but looking better natured than himself, both like train all appearances to protect a houseful from any folcomic and happearances to protect a houseful from any folcomic area, she with tourse, and he with messele. Minerva in the part to min'the crutically, accompanied always by Mrs. Gorden, and the der Bruno. One evening, when they came in a just at dask, they found a stranger in the parlor, who are his name as the Rev. Mr. Sociles, and whom Mrs. Gressen in a look has a when any one came, took her soci in a search showed a very visible disinclination to be a tied, or even to speck. She had carely a glimpse of a dark too, the epos covered by specked, but the impression, slight as it was, was not favorable. She knew to-night, however, that he was talking of Herman, and strained her attention to the utmost that she might listen. But the tones of his voice, so soft, so silken, so monotonous, struck unpleasantly the vibrative chord in her heart. She did not ask herself why; indeed, she was scarcely conscious of the feeling, so occupied was her mind with various matters.

"It is getting quite dark, I will order lamps," said Mrs.

Goreham.

"Oh, if it makes no difference to you, madam, it charms me to sit in this soft, meditative twilight. I dislike the garish lamp, and you may see, perhaps," he touched the spectacles, lightly, "that I have a sufficient reason. Five years ago, I was sun-struck, and in consequence, I suffer much with my eyes, indee I my sight is quite indifferent," he added, pathetically; "I fear that in time I may lose it altogether."

The words and the voice drew much upon the sympathies of the two listeners.

"I presume you have many fine walks around here," he said, a moment after.

"Very many," Mrs. Gorcham, replied; "we of the house, however, confine ourselves to the farm. We have several pretty copses, and Mr. Gorcham has laid out private roads that are well shaded, so that we never have need to use the public highway, except for the carriage."

"How large, may I inquire, is your farm, Mrs. Goreham?" asked the stranger. "I am making a few statistics, as I go along, for my own private journal."

"This west part of it, thrown into fields, woodland, and grazing ground, comprises some two hundred acres, the southerly part, under cultivation, is about forty acres, I think," replied Mrs. Goreham, unsuspiciously. "Mr. Goreham has arranged a very pretty park, that opens from the public promenade, which he used to throw open for visitors to the place, but they did so much damage to his choice tree, that he closed it up a year ago, and only now and then, application, allows a few parsons, of whose principles he is sire, to enter."

Minerva had risen and left the room.

"That young woman is your daughter, I presume," said the stranger, looking after her. "Still, I do not see the resemblance to your son-"

"Oh, not! my daughter and my husband are both in Wash-ington," said Mrs. Gordiam, quickly; "this young lady is a friend of Jessie's."

"Your line's call has gone on business connected with your sale it says at an e, I believe? will be remain long?"

"Not in the them two or three weeks," was the reply, "Alas! I have almost given up all hope of my son's safety. Search discussion as have occurred to make us apprehensive that there has been foul play somewhere."

"It is very sal, very sal," sail the clergyman; applying a snowy har the relief to the rim visible around his spectacles.

He was a most noble specimen of manhool. Thanks to him that I am alive. I am really grateful to add also, though I hap you will not think it exitism in me, that I was so fortunde as to save him from the writh of a Danish governor, once, who for the limit of some trivial eliquette, which he that I was not had intentionally committed, threatened him with prison, and I know not what other extremes. Very fortund by him with gains a late to the same secret or ler with him, and by him with gain late was a block of the interference, your son was set at liberty."

"I thank you," said Mrs. Gorcham, holding out her hand.
"Any court-sy shown to my son, I consider as shown to me."

The ran are to go. Just then, the moon nearly at its fill, the a test of light across the room, enveloping the stately form of the street, with a misty, tremulous light.

will my it my Pray do not consider me bold, but I have heard much of their beauty."

In the second wing toward the reverent friend of her son; "Yes shall have our own private key." She drew a banch in a large to a large of the largest, hand dit to him. At that vary in any as he grasped it, somewhat overeagerly, in his large which they are into the respective to her that she might be doing a very improduct that. But there was no danger, at least, from this saintly personage, and, as for Minerva, she should know nothing about it.

The stranger moved away in the moonlight. Once he turned, showing his glittering teeth as he laughed, muttering, "Two weeks! I must make how while the sun shines; I must be on the watch, night and day; and I will. Now for the hotel."

CHAPTER XVI.

THE BELLE OF SARATOGA.

Senorita Dora was the belle of the Saratoga company. At her very first appearance, the reigning beauties puled and grew envious. So innocent her face, and yet so capable of passion, those dark, southern eyes! Besides, she was the most graceful creature that ever practiced attitudes, till they became a part of her very being. As with all Spanish women, her fan was the ruling charm. Doma Mancha used hers delightfully, but Dora ravishingly. To mark the wrist, white and delicate as a snow flake, bend about the glittering stem, now poised with gleeful motion, now raised in gentlest abandonement, now falling so helplessly! It was a study to see her use it for the purpose of coquetry, very charming, better then smiles, false lips, and honeyed words.

Dora had been domiciled a week, and at once had con pured what all the rest had sighed for in vain, the attention of the great Cuban don. He confessed to himself, that she had grown maryellously handsom: since he saw her last, it would be no harm, surely, to flirt with her a little.

Dora sat in her gleamber, examining with mute attention a bouquet of lovely flowers. Her brother entered, flushed and hurried.

- "Ah, Don Carlos sent you those."
- "Don Johan," she said, roguishly.
- "I forget, though he gave me a stabbing glance yester's y when I carelessly called him by his lawful name. Well, Dora, it seems to me you are progressing."

"How?" Dora held a blushing face down close to the flowers.

"How! why do you ask? Can't I see? can't everybody se? Does he look, at, speak to, in any way notice the rest of the throng? I tell you, you have won him, if you are careful."

"Oh, no," said Dora, thoughtfully. "You remember what he has come for; he will never relinquish her. Would you?"

"Never; but he will. It is not love alone, but spite as well, that urges him on. I can see that he will ultimately try to win my pretty little sister. What a match! the richest fellow in all Havana."

"Oh, nensense, Manuel;" but, nevertheless, a triumph-glance gave new laster to her eyes. "Ah! I see," she added, quickly; "you want the coast clear, you are thinking of our runaway guest. Selfish brother, mine!"

It was his turn to blush, and the red blood showed through the dark cheek.

"Dora," he said, half whispering; "I have heard that she is here."

"Actually, here! in this house," cried the girl, springing up gleefully.

"No, no, not so fast, but she is in Saratoga; and I wonder if you could not help me find her out?"

"If I find her, it will be for Don Carlos, of course," she whispered.

"Then I shan't trust you -I will try myself. By the way, you have a parture provided for to-night, I see," he added, as he noticed a gilt-edged billet upon the table. "That is good, i'r I wish to be away reconnoitering. I hope you will enjoy yourself," he said, going to the dcor.

"Art! I wish you all manner of success," was the playful rejoinder.

Dention call libriber mail, and an hour was illed away choosing dresses for the night.

"I wish I dired werr one of Senora Minerva's splendid

"A: I why not, pray?" asked Coco, dippantly; "her trunks are here."

"He might know-er that little-eyel s norita."

"Pshraw! men never remember. Besides, it will look differently upon you, and you can change the trimmings. Do wear the blue and gold; you will look like a queen."

"I wish I dared," murmured the vain girl.

Meantime, Cozo had opened the trank, and there it lay with its superb laces—the beautiful thing by which Minerva had set so slight value.

"Oh! I shall look so well! Take it out and try it on, Coco. When one does change from simplicity, one might as well change for splendor. There!" she added, as she surveyed hepself in the glass, "it fits as if it were made for me. I will run the risk—I will wear it."

A murmur of delight greeted the entrance of the young Spinish girl, as she came in, leaning on the arm of the magnificent Caban. The general's brow darkened. Don't Mancha felt in her old heart the revival of the jealousy of her youth and beauty. Under many a smile a dagger of eavy was concealed, ready to destroy.

"It seems to me he takes a great fancy to you mail," whispered the withered senora to her brother, the general.

"Oh! no;" replied the latter, not betraying the unersiness he felt, "she is a country woman. One always is is differently towards them."

"Yes, I should judge so by his manner. He will take no other lady out to-night. Really, they are a handsome couple, and how richly she is dressed! Where have I seen a broade like that?—oh! yes, Minerva's kincob—that must be a kincob—only I remember Minerva had light blue trimmings, and those are dark blue."

The general had not listened to this dissertation—he was all eyes, watching his ward narrowly, and when at the close of the dance he saw him lead the pretty creature out on the yeranda, his lips grew prevish.

"It must not be, it shall not be," he muttered; "it would ruin me."

Meanwhile the Don promonaled up and down the shelt red gallery, Dora hanging on his arm, tossing her fan up in a bewitching way, and catching it again, while the moonleans, quivering all over her, made the gents like white flane upon her throat and arms.

" So you'll not return to school again," said the Don lightly.

"Oh, no, in lead. After I have seen all I can of this merry company, I shall go back to dear Cuba."

"And whose heart will you leave aching here? This young and presionate America does not stint in its admiration of beauty," he said, softly.

"Whise heart? Oh! as the girls used to say at Madame Zeigler's, 'I care for nobody, nobody cares for me.' "

"Can you say that with truth?" asked the Don, bending more closely to her.

"With as much truth as such questions merit," she answered, unconscious of the rebuke implied.

"Oh! I beg your parton," he sail, haughtily.

"In both you have no need to," she replied, with school-girl archnes. "And I will tell you truly, that I have left no aching heart here—that I know of."

"Ah! some arrows wound at ran lom," said the Don, grow-because they are shot carelessly."

"You are postical," said Dora, mischievously.

"How can I help it! The moonlight, the music, and you," he sail, expressively. "Before you came I was not inspired."

won! Don Johan," she cried, reprovingly, then hesitated.

" Well!" he said, impatiently.

"How can I help listening to the romantic story that is going the remain. Every help tells it in detail, and I happen to know more than all the rest."

A short emphatic "well," followed.

"Why, the story goes that you are looking for a lost love," sies it, with admirable simplicity. "But I need not speak of what there say. I have both some and known her. Indeed, I think her very be catiful, Sonor Johan."

The Desired at the shaken her a little for this of his a bair don, he could have shaken her a little for this untimely piece of gossip.

"Total Shara Monorate," he said, quietly.

"Yes, she was very lovely."

"You thought so?"

"Of course I did; and you know so."

"I have son by dier," he sail, thoughtfully. The little minx beside him trembled. She only wanted to be sure that he did not love this rival—then !

"Yes; I fancied once she was perfection," he added, in a low, smothered voice; "but I have changed my mind. Scnorita, if she were here to-night, and you were by, I would dance with none but you."

"Oh! senor, do not talk in this way to me," said the yam little creature, her voice tremulous, but with exultation.

"If you say it is displeasing to you, senorita, I will not."

She was only silent.

Then, since you do not forbid me, I will add that it would have made me very unhappy if you had."

"If I had answered you?"

"If you had forbible n me-yes, I should have been un-happy."

"The night air is chilly," whispered Dora

"But you did not!" emphatically said the Don. As they entered the hall, they almost stumbled over the little floure of the general. Had he been listening? Perhaps not; he was surely going toward the assembly-room.

"Ah! guardy—were you looking after me?" asked the Don, suspiciously.

"I was about to find you," answered the general in a surly voice; "somebody is waiting for you."

"Ah! and who is that someboly? Let me lead the senorita to a seat, and I will join you again."

When the Don came out, the general stood moddily in the doorway.

"Well, who is it?" queried the Don in his old, curt way.

" Velasquez."

"Ah! couldn't he thrust his elerical visage up n us some other night, as well? Where is he?"

"In my room; I had him shown there. And look here, Carlos, don't trust too much to that man."

"What! you grown suspicious?" laughed his war I.

"Yes, I confe s I think the man a rascal. I deemed it best just to say to you, don't leave too much in his hands."

"Oh! thank you-well-"

"And Carlos-"

"Johan," whispered the Don.

with that portionless senorita; and, I beg your pardon," he sail, humbly, seeing the flashing eyes of the Cuban; "but they talk of it."

"They, who?"

"Hverylody. They say she has thoroughly infatuated you."

An imprecation burst from the lips of the Don.

"You know where my hopes are placed," said the general, pathetically. "I do not think you would wrong one who has done so much for your interests."

"Pslaw!" sail the your, r man, impatiently; "can I look at no one eler? Must I thoo my eyesight?"

"No, no; I was only afraid-"

"Do not be admit of me, guardy; there's not the least reason. I've been too long on this track to give it up for any small game," said the Don, for some reason smothering his anger. "All I wish is for you to contradict any such assertion fledy. And, furthermore, I shall flirt with whoever I please."

is maly, surely," soil the general; "no one can debar you from that privilege; but I am glad, from the bottom of my heart, that it is nothing more than a pastime. I was fond of such this is in my youth. I don't want the blood of that Am riam on my hearts for nothing," he muttered, savagely, as the D in trade away and hurried up the stairs, impatient to have the interview with Senor Velasquez over, that he might j in D ra down in the ball-room.

CHAPTER XVII.

A PRIVATE ARRANGEMENT.

Don Carlos entered the private parlor with less alacrity than was his wont when about to meet Senor Velasquez. He paused for a moment, struck with the altered bearing of the man. "What an admirable Jesuit!" he thought.

Senor Velasquez was leaning over a huge folio that lay open before him, his whole attitude and demeanor that of a humble, sacrificing clergyman.

"The demure hypocrite!" was Don Carlos' next thought; "if he deceives others, he'll deceive me for a consideration." He walked more firmly; the senor straightened himself. Don Carlos exclaimed as usual, "Well!"

"Good news! the very best. I have found her," excluimed the man.

- "The senorita, you mean?" sail the don, with a little frown.
- "Your pardon; I mean Senorita de Monserate. She is on a farm not two miles from this place."

"Well?" echoed the don.

"I humbly await orders," was the response.

"You say you have seen her? How did she appear?" .

"Very happy; entirely contented," replied the cunning senor, delighted, as he marked the effect of his words on the darkening brow of Don Carlos.

"Where is she?" he asked, shortly.

"At the house of her—I beg pardon—at the home of a Farmer Gorcham—a man of much wealth, I suspect."

"I thought as much," muttered the don, his hate of Los Americanos gaining the ascen lency again.

"I have further learned that the old farmer has gone to Washington to get up sympathy and an expedition for his missing son."

"He has!" Don Carlos set his teeth together. "Then 'tis time something was done."

"That is my view of the matter," said Senor Velasquez; while the days not deep in thought.

"You are sure she don't know you?"

"Very sire; sile rarely looks at a stranger, however -si is seri i and Perhaps you would like to hear how I have managed?"

"No, no!" replied the don, impatiently; "none of the mode verifie rime. It was to escape that that I hired you. Now we have got to think how to act next, and, I confess, my brain is at fault."

"Perhaps you had I ther have it with me; I have thought of a plan, if you will hear it."

"Not now, s n r. On second thought, I will leave it with you; and here is a little keepsake that will, perhaps, help you out;" he place I a rell of bills in his hand. "She must, at all events, return to Cala. I'll punish her, at any rate," he muttered, under his breath.

"Yes, I had supposed that-I have arranged for that; it was my first thought; and, to-morrow, I shall go direct to the city to engage a vessel. It is necessary that I should act with dispatch."

"Just To up a your own credit, then, and spare me the whys and where i res," said the don, impatient to get belowstairs. "R mender, I leave every thing to your sagacity. So, grol-night, and came to me if you need help."

" (" "," mutter dithe soner, as the don hurried away; "the rum ris, ait rull, true, I imagine. Good! so much the better for me."

He gille i mi dy down the stairs; stood a moment searchmathe gay r in below, till he can the sight of a glittering end who had eyes and cars, too, only for themselves; then, with that strang, surering smile, he left the hall, and hurried away, intent upon villainy.

The next day, as the captain of the bark Aspinwall (a vess ! lying at one of the New York pirs sat in his cabin, writing, a termal-laboration and in charted style, called up in him to engage a passage to Cuba.

"I bed mati. .... it ed telling thy coin per nors this trip," the captain said, doubtfully. "We are not exactly prepared, as we are going only with merchandise."

"That will make no difference," replied the man, drawing from his pocket a purse heavy with gold. "I find that your vessel leaves here sooner than the steamer sails, and that she is a clipper-bark, and a very fast sailer. I am placed in somewhat peculiar circumstances, having in charge the daughter of a very dear friend, and who is unfortunately laboring under a slight attack of insanity. She left her family in Havana, and with only money enough to pay her passage, came to this country. Fortunately she met with friends, who saw at once what her condition was, and attended to her wants, placing themselves immediately in communication with her parents, who were almost distracted, both being ill on her account. I was immediately apprised of the fact, and provided with sufficient money to meet all expenses, for her parents are the wealthiest people in Havana, and she an only child. Thus you see how I am placed; and, feeling for the agony of my friends, I wish to dispatch the business with all possible celerity. I think we must sail with you; as for ship-stores, I can lay in enough for her wants and my own. Shall I engage state-. rooms ?"

The case is an urgent one, I confess, and makes a strong appeal to my humanity; still, the idea of leaving a benatic on board is not pleasant. She'll try to jump overboard, or kill herself, or somebody else, and then there'll be the deuce to pay."

el, but you may make yourself perfectly easy on that score. She is not by any means dangerous; a mild melancholy is the chief symptom in her case. She labors un ler the delusion that all who attempt friendliness are her enemies, and she is chiefly anxious to impress upon everybody the idea that she is perfectly sane—a favorite ruse with such persons, you know."

"Yes, yes; I know," answered the captain, quickly; "but, of course, you won't expect me to run such risks without a consideration?"

"Of course not; whatever your charges are, I will pay them willingly and on the instant. I wish for the Indy the largest state-room you have; for myself, the usual accommodations will be sufficient. I am an old voyager. When do you sail?"

"On Friday of this week," was the reply.

The man's olive check paled a little. "Good Friday," he muttered; "it would be the worst of lack to sail on that day. Is it imporative?" he queried, in a little lower tone.

"Als dutely!" was the rejoinder. "Her papers said Thursday, but I have been obliged to put off a day."

"Another ill omen," muttered the seeming minister.

a We Yankees regard such signs as of little moment," said the captain, blantly; "they belong to the times when witchcraft alound I, and they hung a pretty girl for making faces. As fir as luck g es, the Aspinwall has never made a poor voyage; her reputation is up as a first-class go-ahead vessel, and I'd stake a good deal on her for five years to come, if I were a betting man."

Sill that ominous cloud restel on the Caban's brow. He halben nurtured in superstitions, that took a strong hold up n his imagination, and that could not now be rected out. But time was passing, and the work must be done; every thing, as he had told Don Carles, depended now upon dis-Tatch. He fladly clos this business with the captain, stating that the young lady would be brought on board probably near evening; that he should prefer to have a clear gangway, that her enlitin might not be suspected; finally, that being vanzenth mith work up a the captain's sym-1 thy; but that positively as they would show (he here pointelteria frod tein mials which he had presented for the entin's inspection, the matter was as he stated it; all of which the captain readily believed, with the more faith, as he filt the larl gell under his hand. So, it was sattled that on Friday, the Astinwall would leave port with three passengers the Calan, San rita Minerva, and a maid for the latter

CHAPTER XVIII.

AN ABDUCTION.

More than a week had clapsed, and Minerva sat at the window of her large cool room, realing one of Jessie's innocent letters. She was having such capital times. "Oh! Minerva could not begin to imagine how happy she was. She found that her uncle, though very rich, was not at all proud," she said, "and his daughters, though they were elucated at the convent (didn't it seem funny, though?) were as good Protestants as she was. And, oh! she had actually seen and shaken hands with the president; had been to the White House with her cousins, and such an array of splendid dr.sses, flir faces, and noble-looking men, she never saw before. She had visited every place of interest, had been to two or three parties, and oh! she was perfectly will with pleasure. But the best of the news, and what she was sure would som to Minerva more glorious than all, was, that the men with whom her father held audience, were to see what they could do in the case of dear Herman. There had been so much fuss, of late, with fillibu ters, and all that sort of thing, that they supposed he might be imprisoned by the officials of Havana, or be the victim of private malice; in either case, they would do what they could." Then followed words of love and caution, so that Minerva sat with tear-filled eyes, quite happy, looking out upon the beautiful prospect. Her fifth in secing Herman again had strongly revived -perhaps I should say strong by revived, by as simple a thing as a dream. She had heard his voice—the tone was that of glalness. She seems lito be brought to Lis sile as by a mira le; to her he looked for hope, for help, almost for life. Never had her Leart best with such mindel emotions as when she awoke from that vision. She was so happy! she felt almost as if wings had replaced her slower powers of locomotion, and she could hear still the whisper of his voice through the quist air.

The time was after dinner, neuring three o'clock of the afternion. When she had read Jessie's letter, she hurried into the roun of Mrs. Gorcham, who was partially an invalid.

"Are you well crough to walk, this afternoon?" she asked.

"Not quite," was the reply. "But don't stay for me, your exer is is so limited, that I dare not have you give up your walk. Take Brund, and I am sure the gardener's wife will go with you."

It was a lovely afternoon, and Minerva Ionged for the solitule of the great oaks, where she was wont to rove. Trath to tell, it suited her best to be alone, though the company of the zol francis wife was no intrusion, for her tastes were r din I, and her conversition was instructive. She left the room silently to prepare herself, and on the way met the gurl nor's wife, who to her response: " Bo you going out?" rec ivel no reply, save the quiet, "yes;" for Minerva could not ran the risk of spoiling a lovely walk by the common-place s city of the fit gar kner's wife. So, after throwing on bonn tard namely, slees contered through the long, shaded entry, out upon the simbowed grass plat, covered with snowiest It is and called Bruno. At the sound of her sweet voice, the d z. who was lying near his house, at the further end of the garine, sprang up with a joyful cry, and ran toward her. She patted him on the head as she stood there, a pretty picture, her dirk curb blown about her check by the breeze, and the d g with helf lemma eyes, fixed upon her beautiful face.

"Brim, will you go with me for a walk?" she asked, she ving the little book that she usually carried upon such extincions.

The degree a sharp bark, that might have been interpreted, "yes."

"Well, a me along then, but you must not run; here, here, stry along the me, for I have no other protector but you, to-day."

The fiblical or at the surely understood, for he fill back on the less and and natural with her step for step, looking momally up as if he said, "you see I am trying to take the best effects of you." Qubitly they walked along the grassy path that help the broad fields. These they passed, under the shade of the applicate with lined either side. The low hum of insects in the under-brush and along the helges, the quick, soft twitter of birds in the branches overhead, the ripple of a brook not far off, all these combined to add to the delichtil reflections with which Jesi's letter, so sweet, so guil les, hal filled her mind. They passed here an orchard, with its wealth of ripening fruit, there a patch of some choice vegetable, and again, a field of waving corn. Presently, the paths became more like roads. A thick and pleasant foliage came so n in sight, and the cool smell of the groves greated the sines dell-Ciously. A light stile taken down—Brano had leaped it previously—and Min rva was in her favorite haunt. How silvery green the trees were, with the sun sending, between their branches, soft pencil-rays of light! Far as the eye emili reach, there was a routing of green, for here the beautiful class had been trained in arching sprays, that met, forming lines of bearty. Away, on every hand, the cooch dark paths ext nded, and scats were placed at intervals, for reting place. Minerva strayed on, smilling to herself, and talking to Brune for growling, as he went.

"Bruno, vou're a bad, naughty boy; did you know it, Bruno? And Bruno, I shall report you to your mester, when he comes home, your your your meter, I mean; he, the, stop growling, you ought to give a laugh-back, when I speak of him, did you know it, sir? I wender if you'll remember him, you but boy! of course you will, though, a year's about a do-n't m. 't r much to a deg, des it, Brane? What i grawlits sail? What is it at I wender? at the beautiful piece of hip sky up there? or the sant of the sweet wild flowers? ir shami a grad, had here the year to so telling lovely in this charming place! Is it a shake, Brand! I Wonder what can all the creature? He has done so three or four times, lately. Whe's here, Brune, good days you'll proteet me, wen't you? Yes, yes, the old Brune, only I den't half-like that growling," she alled, mainly. "Of our there's not by here, but I'm nerveus, I believe, neverthele, 21 . 1 . . .

She attrib a lost, daille recon and each lock, pole, almost help to a The report of a conclusional data for the close Branch, the good, a the day, had reliable at her for, covered with his line.

"Ola my G.-!, pretect me!" cried Minerva; "Oh, Heaven, while way si di I go F'

"Net time way, for your life," cried a deep voice, and in and I man in green spectacles stood before her. "Park n me, makim," he added, in a tone of deep Take the path he had come; "I think there are villains there. Some one is larking round, this poor creature is a prey."

"Oh!" Min rva shaller. I; "what shall I do? I have C. ... a Ral enemies, which way must I go to escape them?"

.. Will put trust yourself to my guidance? your friend at the farta-la . Mrs. G. relann, delivered this key in my keeping, the I will have an error tunity to inspect the place."

Min ry a filt e mijaratively at east. Surely Mrs. Gorcham will have have lightly done a thing like that, unless she hilperitenting in the man.

"If you will conduct me home, safely," she said, trembling in try line, as sleen a crited his arm, glancing with so inheart must have been a served to print its pleasing.

"The parsel to listen, as if a vicinity that some one was near, "that leads into the prince light and the safet all this time he "Is ... : her her fet," showail; "I am full of terror, was lined by in a critte kill per Bruno! how could they have t. I. m. Why! I. re is a carriage in the private grounds, That is a lam and I -" a spenie applied to her lips and in the interest of the second of the in-der de la la la vehicle was driven rapilly out, a boy I to the with a key, below the sate and threw it . . i will; in return, the same recessed him a piece of Win M. rva aring the to the interest she lay on a . Fer. Little in the state of the which had been given up and The Theorem 1 and the waters in the principal the training the swift, un-Aller is to bewilderment, she closed her eyes with a smile, murmuring, "Thank God, it was then only a dream, and we have started, and Herman is on board—"

She glanced slowly around the cabin. It certainly was different in size and appointments from the one she had gone to sleep in. Bewildered and surprised, she tried to gath r her thoughts, as she murmured, "If only Bundola would come in then I should know; if my head would only stop aching, and Bandola would come."

The door opened, for a moment her heart beat violently, but sank again when she saw enter, not Bandola, but a stout negress, whose face was most unpleasant.

"It was no dream, then," she murmured; "it was no dream, Oh, God, help me!"

"What's the matter, chile?" asked the woman, standing off, as if not quite decided, whether it was safe to approach nearer.

"They have brought me here against my will," she cried, bursting into tears, and striking her forehead with her clasped hands.

"They always says so," muttered the woman. "Well! so long you's not wiolent, you'll fare well, chile, but et you hegins to git wrathy, the Lord help ye! ye'll have to have straight-jacket right on, no mistake."

"A straight-jacket-me? oh! what can you mean?" cried

Minerva, white with new and sudden terror.

"Never mind, honey, on'y try to keep right, dat's all. The man as brought you here, told me jest what to do, so you needn't talk none, honey, no use for you to tell ole story, you knows, might's well keep yer grieft to yerself."

"God help me! I don't know what you mean," said Minerva, quite despairingly.

"No, no, you never does," said the negrees, shortly; "I've seen 'em in irons and jackets and every thing, an they never knows what it's for."

A little light began to glimmer on the poor girl's brain.

"Where are they taking me?" she a-ked, faintly.

"To Cuby, chile, back to your old father and mother, breaking dere hearts for ye, honey."

"I haven't any father and mother, they both die I years ago."

"Oh, no! I 'spects not," said the negress, pleasantly, laughing a little to herself. "If I'd said they's dead, 'spoze you'd a thought 'em living, ch? But, don't make no difference, noways, you's going back to Cuby; 'spects you never was in Cuby, neither."

"Oh, yes! that was my home, I was born in Havana," said

Minerva.

"Well, that's mighty reasonable, now, considering, thought as marks you wouldn't recollect, p'raps."

"I recoll et too much," murmured the young girl, grieving-ly. A moin after she sail, "Can I not see the captain?"

"Well, I gresses not, captain doesn't like to go in ladies state-rooms; if you wants do steward now, he'll bring you any thing you orders. Say, piece of grill chicken."

"Oh, no, no, no," exclaimed Minerva, in tones of intense disgreet. To think of food in her misery, was too much.

"Well, I doesn't insist on nothin'," replied the negress;
"xent ye must be very quiet and still, 'cause there'll be no danger to ye, if ye be; but, I've known some folks in your state, to be I to right down in the water, when de paroxisms can to state, so try to be still, honey."

"What is your name?" asked Minerya, after she had

w. '. I the weman with pitiful eyes for some moments.

"I's called Mrs. Roxy," was the reply. "Well, chile, stop biling at me, yer eyes kinder haunt me; what is it you wants?"

"Oh, Mrs. Roxy," murmured Minerva, plaintively; "won't you have me for a little while? I should like to be alone for a short time."

"Orders is to watch ye close, chile, see't you don't do no mischief," was the short reply.

will I pole, who wish to injure me; I assure you, I have all my finite, I know all about it, and I shall submit, because I mist. I am in the power of ball people, and must will G I have out of their han is."

"All som is take and neteral," said the negrees, "but I mid to find I tell ye. I's som people jest your way; ye'd never linew 'tranit jest as they said, if 'twant for 'sperience; you see, chile, I's got 'sperience."

For a moment, Minerva was hopeless, but after she had thought a while, she said:

"Will you let me write something with a pencil, and will you give it to the man who brought me?"

"Oh, yes, anythin' in reason, honey; I ain't 'clined to be onreasonable," was the reply.

Minerva lifted the little gold pencil attached to her chain, and wrote as follows:

"SENOR VELASQUEZ:

me thoroughly; you can perhaps contemplate the act you have performed with complacency. I leave you and your conscience with God, who is the Judge and the Father of the orphan. I only beg you, as you hope for mercy, hereafter to let me be alone, whenever I wish. The face of the old servant who attends me is disagreeable, I do not want her in my state-room. Say what you will to them all, I shall put my case in the hands of God, and leave with Him, also, the retribution; but let me not be annoyed with any attendance.

"MINERVA DE MONSERATE."

The negress carried the note. In a few moments she returned, looking somewhat crest fallen. In her hand she carried a folded paper, on which was written:

"Your request shall be complied with, I have given orders."

The young girl smiled bitterly.

"I knew he would not dare to do otherwise," she said to herself,

CHAPTER XIX.

TROUBLE AT THE FARM-HOUSE.

The rays of the declining sun made faint show in one corner of the firm-house kitchen. The farmer's wife had not long been awake from her nap; the cook was busy frying gridil-cakes; the gardener stood outside, mending a damaged hoe; the gardener's wife, who was fond of the good things of this life, had taken a cruller from the well-heaped pile upon the supper-table, and was devouring it with much zest. The whit at of white linen cloths graced the board. It was spread with taste; and honey and grapes, and golden butter and rich cream abounded.

The kitchen, with its venerable furniture, never looked more charming; content seemed lurking and smiling in every corn r, and the old fashioned high-shouldered silver tea-set, gli to not with the very broadest benevolence, as it stood ready to do duty.

h.ls.m. what improved his appearance by a clean shirt and a whiter face, while his hair was scrupulously combed and part. L n. ... an I ringing it with some vehemence.

"Quite, I green," replied his wife, seizing the bell that stood

Mis. Garcham came into the room, looking at the little, old fashion, I gold watch she always were of afternoons, and walked quite primly up to the table, to survey its appointments,—her daily custom.

"How pleasant it will be to see the dear faces again," she said, quietly preparing to seat herself. "Why doesn't Miss Mingrouse and, I won ler; do you think she heard the bell?"

La, yes, she must," replied the gardener's wife. "Come to think on't, I haven't seen her come home. 'Spose she got asked in them woods? No harm though, if she did, with Bruno to watch her."

"Oh, of course she came home," said Mrs. Goreham, confidently; "she never stays. She might have come in some other way; just ring again, if you please."

Again the bell tingled—no answer.

"I'll go and see if Bruno's here," said the gardener, while the farmer's wife sat irresolute.

"Might as well say grace, Miss Gorcham, p'r'haps by that time she'll come. She laid down, like's not, and fell to slep," the gardener's wife said, cautiously. "There's Mr. Hambledon at the yeller house, when the folks don't come in time to the table, he begins to say grace, and you ought to see how it brings 'em. He never waits, for what's the use?"

"I'll wait a few moments," said Mrs. Gorcham, quietly.

"Well, it beats all," exclaimed the gardener; "Bruno ain't nowhere. I called him with a whistle, as he hears gen'ally from one end o' the farm to the t'other, but I don't see him."

"What can be the meaning of the child's stopping in this manner? The sun is almost down," exclaimed Mrs. Gorelam, an indefinable terror taking possession of her heart. "I should have known better than to have let her walk alone. I thought you would certainly go with her," she added, turning to the gardener's wife, who was quietly helping herself to another cruller.

"She never so much as asked me," replied that portly personage. "She has too high ways for us humble folks."

"She did not? and I would not have sent her by hers If, for worlds. How imprudent! we must make image it to search."

"Bless my heart!" exclaimed the gardener's wife, wat hing the kurried efforts of Mrs. Goreham, who was throwing on bonnet and shawl, "ain't she old enough to take care of lerself?"

"She is placed in peculiar circumstances," replied Mrs. Gorcham, in a quick voice; then signifying to the gard of quick who, mantime, had swallowed a cup of the, poured expelitionsly by his wife, managing at the same time to fill his pockets with doughnuts, they went away together, the man not forgetting to provide himself with a stout stick. In silence they walked at a rapid gait, till they reached the entrance of the resort that was Minerya's favorite resting-place. Slowly and with faltering steps, Mrs. Goreham moved on, an impression of coming trouble, guining on her mind with every step she took.

"Oh!" she cried, her face pide with horror, as she came to the mittables body of the dog; "there has been feed work here; Brino, my poor, flathful Brino, dead; and Minerva where is she?"

"That dog's winged, and no mistake," said the gardener, stoping over the prostrate animal, while Mrs. Gorchun, special swith sudden four and sorrow, stood like one bereft of considerances. "He ain't dead, though," he said again, flating blass II; "we'll so if we can't bring him round. But what are we gaing to do about the young lady?"

to the other. You must go home and get men and lights—ch! the other I should have been so careless; I know what danger threatened her, too. We were both too source in our family I safety; now, Heaven only knows where she is. There has been foul work."

As a mas it was posible, a number of mon, principally formulands from maight ring places, set out to explore the primise. Until late at night they searched with lanterns, but they were no traces of the young girl visible. The dog was cominted by placed in a curt and driven home, still breathing, but approach we may wend to to dangerously to recover. The first approach the sorrow consequent on this mysterious affair, and that the former's re-

Jobson's from the brilliants of the Schington to the dark as I rome of the Schington to the Schington I should be held and to love, thrown upon the torible more discolar personage. After some consultation, the old firm a who exist in the firm a wakened in the limit of a cital some application had a cital to go, and, as he against the life the horse talk with them. However, which is a cital where the part of a cital appropriate for the first had a cital where the part of a cital sorther had a cital sorther in a such that the first should have a cital where the part of a cital sorther had a cital sorther in a such later citality to held he visitor to a sort, and then, with a stree of cool importance, awaited his communication. "I have come on the behalf of a young bely who is a country women of yours," said the farmer, sitting entirely at his case, and returning the don's cool stare with a glance every whit as cool.

"Ah!" ejaculated the Cuban, while the general's newspaper rattled as he turned it; "what does the young lady wish?" and he puffed again, this time regarding the ceiling abstract-lly.

"I can not tell what she wishes," said the farmer, whose warm feelings were rapidly getting the better of him; "but, in plain terms, a young laly, by name Minerva de Mon-rate, has been ablieted from my home, where she was placed for safe keeping; and, I have no doubt, you know enough of the affair, to inform me if she is in good hands, at least."

The paper rattled again with an exultant motion, while the don, very slowly removing the pipe from his mouth, turned contemptabus eyes upon the farmer, as he said:

"Old man, what do you suppose I know about young ladies who find an asylum at your house?"

"If I knew as much as you do about it, I think I could lodge you in an American institution, such as you have not yet visited," said the old farmer, the hot blood surging to his temple. "It is my firm belief that you are here under an assumed name, and that you have either abdated the young haly of whom I speak, and who was to have been married to my son, for whose disappearance I shall call you also to assecut at the proper time."

"Old fellow, you are insane," said the don, rising, and insa-lently stretching himself.

"Don't you call me old fellow, you rascally foreigner," crid the farmer, advancing toward him. "We American Citizens do not allow even Spanish dons to insult us with impenity."

"My good man," said the little general, flercely, "do you know who you are talking to?"

"Well, yes, I believe I do," replied the firmer with the remphasis, standing very straight, and looking terribly grand. "I am talking to men who call themselves god and, but have never learned to treat gray hairs with respect. I'd whip my dog Bruno, who is but a brute, if he had so little manners."

"Shall I ring for my servant to show you the way out?"

queried the Cuban don, languidly.

"Ring for what, you puppy you?" then lered the old man, in the sthat drove both the general and the don some parts backward; "ring for your niggers to show me out? If you don't do it, I'd pitch them and you out of the window;" and his great mas less and strong che t quivred for the action, as heatless his arms out. "You'd look well ringing for your trans to how me the way over my own had. The ground the opposites stand on the stump d with his foot) is mine, over in heat it; and you and your niggers, all sold, tog ther, we ultimately what his worth to me. You had better take ours how you in all a man who is king on his own sold. I care her providely, to ask you a civil question, which you have all attend to answer, yet."

of a, we went nour of your primasions," excluind the dial start ring a little as if elegantly in liferent. "We are a seem of the privary of our own apartment; and, in Collin was graffed, the sword would have setted any qualitated this kind before now, if such words had been empty to be the put in an analytic necessity of rin ing my

19 19

Like a line with failer ey at the old form rewhold probably have the related depended word accordingly by probably have the related to the form the line has been dead to the hand the don off his slipp related to the remark of the room; and here a word to the sold of the room; and here a word to the sold of the room; and here a word to the sold of the room; and here a word to the sold of the room; and here a word to the sold of the form rewas out the the don. Not word the western to he can be form a was out the the the sold of the health than hoar before. He fit as if he had to the health than hoar before. He fit as if he had to the health the new, with more creating than ever, come et a with the Creaters with the great stone step he was not by Jessie, who had been was thing for him.

"Ohr. r." seerid, "I am rink you have come hour."

" In an and the property making the farm r, standing still.

"May but the case a carbana in the parker willing in you, and he has been talking with me this half hour. He knew Minerva and all her family."

The farmer hastened in, followed by his denghter, whose attention had been powerfully attracted by the hundsome face of the stranger.

It was Senor Abrates who introluced himself to the farmer. He had heard of the abduction, he said, and, being interested in the young lady, had come to see what he could learn about it. He had been, in earlier years, a playmate of Senorita de Monserate, and both his sister and himself regretted the unpleasant turn which the affair had taken. Understanding, to some extent at least, how matters stood, he believed that the senorita had been forcibly carried away; and the probability of her fate, if she were in the hands of Don Carlos' deceiving ar mt, filled him with dismay, for he did not believe the latter was at all scrupulous in the fulfillment of his engagements, nor could he believe him under oath.

This testimony placed matters in the most unfavorable light. Ten ler-hearted Jessie walked to the window to hide her tears, and the old farmer, resting his cheek on his brown hand, muse I silently. At last he sail if rvently:

"Well, I believe I'm one of the OH Testament Christians, for I'm drea Ifal apt to take judgment in my own him is where I think the Lord allows it. And I've got the faith of these times, too, as well, for I believe the God of Moses will protect that poor child; ay, and bring my son back to me from a facign land. It may not seem consistent to say that I shall pray for this, when you may hear, maybe, that I knocked down that Spanish puppy at the hotel up youder for his insolence; but my blood is quick, and the man deserved it. Think of his calling his higgers to order me—noe out of his room. I'd do it again."

Senor Abrates laughed heartily. "That makes the accord time," he said.

"Why, what do you mean?" queried the old farmer.

"Your son did the same service for him, so I have un! r-stoo!, when, through his contrivance, he was or! rel to prison."

"Ah!" sail the old man, the defally, "in the be Her-

It must have been a great provocation, as is my case; and certainly it is the first time. I have ever built hands on any man."

It is not less to say, that after the interview with the young Enterl, who promised to leave nothing undone in this matter that he could do, the old farmer suffered some remorse for the doller the morning. His conscience, quick and clear, took him to task, in spite of his suffered tooth for a tooth."

CHAPTER XX.

THE END OF SENOR VELASQUEZ.

The voyage to Caba in the Aspinwall threatenal to prove to Hose. A seression of heal-winds and baffling storms, that multiplicity in protest, not always in the most decorous laterer, that he believed there was a Jonah on board, detailed by modely; and, to add to the general uneasiness, the contain had Sonor-Velis prozon his healt, sick with what the standard had a dimensus fever. Day after day Minervary him I in her state-room, until the captain, thoroughly alored I for his patient, and believing from the incoherent was true captain, run the risk of her sanity, and sent for her.

After an conversation, his brow cleared.

"If I had known this somer," he said, "I should have let the villate the line is not fit to live. Here I have been nor ingrand a ring bin, giving him the time my duties absolutely report, and all for a lying importor."

"What can I do?" add Minerva, anxiously; "I am tire!

of inaction. Let me aid you in some way."

"I in and the little plain, with some veloments; "I'd the has tried to murder you by inches?"

"I am rathed to hop my went on my in his need," sail

Minerva, gently. "That, at least, I have learned in all my troubles: to cherish no malice, and to return good for evil."

"Well, I'll be blest, then, if you ain't a thorough-going Christian," sail the sailor, in his rough way; "nothing clse could do it—no," he added, sotto rocc; "and, even then, nothing else but a woman!"

So, when she was able, Minerva took her post by the stateroom in which Senor Velasquez lay. Frightfully changed he was in the short struggle he had had with the fearful typholi. When the delirium was on him, he talked much of Minerva, and exposed his plans with diabolical minuteness. One night, Minerva, whose state-room was opposite, heard the name of Herman on the frenzied lips. The meen threw its silvery light in at the stern windows, so that every object was charly visible, and Minerva, anxious to hear whatever concerned that beloved name, glided's filly from her state-room and crept to to the other side of the calin. The negres, who was enployed as nurse, sat on the floor just beyond the deer, ask p, her bowed head resting on her folded arms. Senor Voles prez was talking very softly now, so that Minerva crept elser and closer to listen. Terrified at his face, she turned her eyes from the ghastly picture. The steward had shaven his heal, and his eyes weirdly willi, large and chen, rolled from sile to sile in their loose sockets.

"Yes, yes, Don Carlos," muttered the sick man, "I'll keep the secret of La Vintresse. Are you sure you have him sufficience? Los Americanes are very gaming—very struct! Ah! of l Jose is with him, the treated keep's light, Hoknows how to terture—let the prisoner look to it—La Vintresse. I was there myself once—heaven preserve me from the recell ction! The walls were half down—rotten pasts stool tottering, sank at their base in pools of mull and water. There was not a green spot—the man will die of declaring. He will choke himself with his own hands; he will go mull a list rains out a rainst the horrid walls; yes, yes, he will go mull?

Minerva listened shubberingly. Presently he broke cut in a will cry—"Bring the priest!" It was a strange fun y, but, nevertheless, it occurred to Minerva to repeat the wer life arises."

&quot;Ah!" cried the senor, carerly, "are you here, hely father?"

&quot;I am," sai! Minerva, in a low voice.

"No no-list step-I see the crown of your head-yes, y a, the shaven head, and the roury, and the robe;" and here I a confect n, now and then coherent—at times too she dieg for human hearing, but still the shrinking girl list : 1 in the strange shence that was not silence, for the waves, es they washed up, answered the sick man's moan. At last Le came to his later life. "Father," he said, "listen. I wanted the girl, and I was promised a fabulous sum if I secured her to the old general, her uncle. But I was cunning," he added, in a tar of triumph; "I made them pled to the money to m., and, after all my planning and theirs, I meant to marry I. r hay and secure the fortune. Half should have gone to the church, hely father, so I should be absolved. I put her en the vest, I carried her to Cuba, and there the fiends got n. . S I' he cried, for the confession had gone from his min I and his raving grew so fearful that Minerva was obliged to waken I thille steward and the captain. Their tardy steps wer, hower, too late; the state-room was empty, and the Harit mires sat createhed up in a heap, her eyes glittering with terms while she cried, "O captain! the devil! the devil!" The man at the wheel averred that semething, either man or 1. t, clims up the cultin-stairs and flung itself over the ship's sile. In an instant every measure was taken, every effort halfated Caban-the tool of worse men than hims li-but all in vain; the miserable man had gone to th. ! :: m in the milst of his iniquity, with all his sins on his head.

CHAPTER XXI.

LA VINTRESSE AND THE RESCUE.

MINERVA had searcely recovered from this shock, when the pleasant shores of her birthplace came in view. The scene, however, brightened her drooping eyes, and gave a little color to her pale check as she saw the tall Castle Moro; the flars and the signals; the houses so near the water; the innumerable masts of a heavy commerce. Her plans had been well mature l. Secure in her very loneliness, she did not fear fer their ultimate success. The captain was ready to stan l by her, an l, indeed, he would not allow her to leave the ship without close attendance. How strange, and yet familiar seemed the surroundings, as she drew near the place of her former residence. But for the bitter reminiscences connected with past seen s, she could have kissed the smooth tranks of the gorg ous palms. The city was unusually silent; it was the fever season, an I, in addition, they heard that the cholera had broken out with dreadful violence. The house, as they drove up the grand of lavenue, had a described look. There were but few servants left, and the main building was closed. Min rva went round the wile veranda till she came to the kitchen inclosure. A woman, on her hands and kneed, was fanning with her breath a few white coals, while beside her laid a bunch of herbs, and a pan of water. In another moment the flame: darted up. The servant turned impatiently at the sound of a footstep echoing through the hollow dreamers of the great cook-room.

It was Bandola.

The girl give a shrick of minibal joy as l'terror, spring to her feet, looked on all sides with value for, ran toward Minervo, and fell, weeping on her shoulder.

"Oh! it is you, then! I never, hever expected to any again. It is too much joy-I shall direct joy."

6 No, yen wen't, Ban lola; you must live to help me in my not relievely our letter to the consul? It has almost killed not. Don't also came on board when the vessel was in port, and which said I know not; but the captain told me to go with him, and hor I have been months, though they have some like years. I should never have been here, perhaps, only the soround have been sent to the hospital to tend the sick, and the old hors keep rows taken with the cramps, and he mount to give her modicine. But, oh! if you should be information.

11.11s. Do you want to go back to America?"

"Dati ari rme," will Minerva; "God will take care of me. Who is in the house besides you?"

which is that housekeeper—and there! do you hear which: It is that herrible Jose. I have seen his face go parting window every day, till I am so tired of it."

"Where does he come from every day, Bandola?" asked times, but I suppose she never knew either, for she never told me. He brings something in a basket, and carries something away; what it is, I knew not. Oh! I can't get tired boking at yet," she albel, in an costasy. "Are you sure I am awaket I have frightful dreams, sometimes; but if this is a dream, I want to sleep always."

Minerva.

"Ye are will awake, Bandola; so am I. You shall not remain her, but go back to America with me, if all things Cin right," sail Min rva.

Tears of gratically stelle down the dark checks of the grateful girl, as she uttered the low, fervent cry, "God be thanked!"

"I must see this Jose; where is he?" askel Minerya.

"Ar in I at the ready.

"I although to the horalter, Bundola"

The in hill up her head, and marched like a sollier.

Marine literathe helper, who give a shrill cry, all - . . I in the literature

"Don't be find and great Monte," said Minerya, soothingly; "you see I have dropped from the clouds. I wish you to give me the keys of the main body of the house."

"Against the orders of Don Carlos," murmured the house-keeper.

"I am mistress, now," said Minerva, with dignity.

The woman unloosed the keys with trembling eagerness, and placed them in Minerva's hand. Bidding Bandola follow her, she entered at once into the long-closed-up passages, and unlocked the business room, where every thing remained just as the general's steward had lett it, with a view, probably, to trimming it up before the family returned. Here she sent for the old negro, Jose. He came in very soon, a tall, bony, cruel-faced man, who e complexion, black though it was, seemed to change to a yellow pallor, when he saw what seemed to be an apparition, for he could scarcely persuade himself of the reality of her presence.

"Jose," she said, sternly, "have you come this morning from La Vintresse?"

The man was dumb for a moment. At last he managed to answer that he had.

"What horses are here?" she asked.

"Rose and Charlie," he replied.

"Put them into the carriage immediately," she exclaimed.

"Into the carriage, senorita?"

"Into the carriage, I said; then come back. Be quick!" she added, in a sharp, authoritative voice.

He was gone, absolutely lost in wonder, and did nothing but roll up the whites of his eyes as he muttered to himself: "Wha' in Harry she gwine to do nex'?"

"Carriage in, senora," he said, humbly.

"Very well, I'm going up to La Vintresse; you may drive me."

If the negro's mien was astonishment and wonder before, it was now simply horror.

"You," was all he said, slinking back shufflingly.

"Yes, I, certainly; I am going to La Vintresse. You, comprehend, perfectly, you are to drive."

"You,—to La Vintresse?" he muttered again, his lips source-

"I am out of all patience with you; are you so stupid? Illel, r you may carry me there, peacefully, or I shall appeal to the consul to I take police go with me. I am your mistress, now, and S nor Herman is to be brought from La Vintresse, by my orders."

"But he is sick," muttered the negro, with ashen lips.

"Then so that pillows and a bed are placed in the carriers, 20, But bla, and bring them from wherever you may that them. Be quick, girl," she added, her heart sinking, as she thought little she might know has sick he was. Still the negro stood irresolute, staring at her.

"Has you taken have of your senses, Jose?" she cried, the dingly, stamping her foot in feigned passion. The man mattered an interest word or two, and went slowly out. A half was some improving and bearing a few necessary articles, Minerva entered the carriage with Bandola.

"St p a memont," she cried, as the man was mounting to his sect; "you will want another man to help, in case he will need to be lifted."

"I lift him," answer I the man, surlily, and sprang on the box.

"Are per a tathal?" marmurel Bandola.

"Afrill, ch, no. gold Bindoh, I have not once thought of fir," sid Min wa, as the carriage rolled swiftly along "I will a to the day no, it is he who fears, I think; he is a limit, crud mun, but I believe now he fears me. He knows I bive poor to expect him to the authorities, and he will be the allocations, till I have done with him. But, O Bandoh: what we are going to see, I know not; there I fear every thing."

"It is not provide your believe Mr. Herman is there!" exclaimed the girl, shrinkingly.

"Y. I be they have buried him alive, but we shall have so, we must be no ring the outskirts of Havana."

"And shall you take him back with you?"

"If it is possible, immediately to the ship," was the reply.
"The captain was to have every thing in readings, and perhaps a detrient in the Weshall not sail for a week, and have a will be perhaps out over a prospect where naturally, "should be chain; out over a prospect where naturally, "should be called a chain;"

had been subjected to various tortures by fire and by flool!" "Oh! what a miserable quiet there is here! so unearthly."

In truth, the very air seemed as stagment as the ground. The gullies in the road were deep with green water, the stanted palms seemed each to be laboring under some deformity, the fields were aril, and presently the wretchel ruins of La Vintresse came in view, a sickening mass of black and tottering walls.

"Very dirty here, senora," said Jose, as the carriage stopp 1 at a large out-building; "but if the senora will wait, Jose get planks and lay them."

In a few moments there was comparatively a dry path. Minerva, with difficulty controlled her feelings, as she stepped into the narrow hall of the building, that had for so long be a Herman's jail.

"The senora I hope will not punish Jose," said the negro, humbly; "he did but what his master ordered."

"You shall not be punished, Jose, only lead me to him."

Up the narrow, dirty stairs went the old negro, applied the key reluctantly to the lock, the door opened with a harsh creak. Bandola had placed one arm about Minerva, for what with verse terror and excitement, she could scarcely stand. The rotan was large, bure, with miserably deficed walls, and high-burred windows. Neither table nor chair, nothing but a a low pullet spread in one corner, and a camp stool near one window, as if the prisoner had lifted hims if to see the doory sight without.

Minerva gave a low, shivering cry. What was that extended on the pallet, ranged, scarcely human? "Oh! can that be?" she wailed pitifully.

Jose shrank away from her real sorrow. Slowly she went up to the prostrate figure, halt-hoping it mirat not be him. The man seemed ashop, though his hollow eyes were not much more than half-closed. His skin clarg tightly to the bones of his fire, and was so painfully bright, that it is set the thought of varnish. The beard had grown fillingly profile, and fill on his throat and choose, in matted, the laims es. Language cannot convey an ilea of his extrementaries.

"O Bandola!" sold of Minerva, the tears raining down;

"an Le Le alive? can be live? oh! cruel, cruel f. n.ls! How could my und? and Don Carlos bring an innocent man to this? What shall I do? I fear to to ach him, he looks so thall; O Herman! Herman! if you could only speak to me?"

"He shape good part of his time," said Jose. Minervalded has trust has life roply; she know the man before her must have to mas thank in heart as in complexion, to see a fallow-boing suffer as he must have suffered; there was inherent crucky in a nature like that. Knowling down on the writch of the r, she softly kissed his forehead. The motion, shelt as it was, roughly kissed his forehead. The motion, shelt as it was, roughly him. He opened his eyes, glas y and restless; they fall up in the loving glance of Minerva. A singular change came over his face, the whole count nance had a if a thin red fame had suddenly run from vein to vain, under that family whiteness. He sprang upright in the boil, or is done in a hollow voice: "At last! at last! O God!" and sank back lifeless.

"I have kill I him," cried Min rya, as the megro went toward him.

"His Las two or three time, senora," said the man, "If you will no down stairs, I will not him ready to go in the carriage. I doesn't think he's dead."

S. Hing like a child, giving way to utter abandonment of grid, Mingrass went down the stairs, and walked to and fro in the harrow entry, But I do trying in vain to console her.

We must be in the cerriage," said the faithful girl; "to de William it ou lit to make you happy."

would be Bentha, I for I have hill him," cried Mineral pit of sly; "it might have all been managed so differently, and now he is dothed al," she walled pitcously. She was provided to see the littless form, that a child might almost carry.

Productions Jose had replaced the ni rable russ had a spin a little and the nation from him, prionself, which had not be a little and the had not be a little and the had not be a little to him. It has a little nation of the carriers of the little State of the carriers and had not be a significant to had not his surroundings dryned to the little State of the little nation of the carriers and had not be a significant to the little surroundings dryned to the little state of the little upon him. He smiled feebly like a child; he had no longer the strength to speak.

Minerva had given directions to be driven immediately to the pier. The captain stood in realiness, the usual formalities were harried through, and in a short time the poor invalid lay on a bed of down, surrounded by careful friends and the best of nurses. A skillful doctor pronounced his case one of slow starvation and complete inanition, giving it as his opinion that a year's time would searcely complete the process of restoration, so entirely had all his faculties succumbed. "And I think if you had delayed till to-morrow," he added, "he would not have been alive, the light was so far spent."

Minerva listene l in silent gratitude; she had no words, but thankful tears.

CHAPTER XXII.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

JESSIE Set in the pleasant parlor of the old farm-house, playing a few pleasant chords. Her mother, pale and feeble, listened from her wheeled-chair near the window. There were flitting thoughts in Jessie's mind that found expression now and then in a sweet smile, or else in a profound bending of the pretty head, while the eyes looked thoughtfully far away.

Presently in came the farmer, but a changed man was he. His check was flushed—his face serious yet beaming, while in his great brown eyes could be seen the shadow of tears.

"Jessie," he said softly-"Jessie, come here."

The girl ar se, paused a moment, seeing that her mother had fallen askep, then harried out to meet her father.

He led her rapilly around the path that led to the grape-arbor.

"Jestin," he will, and the girl caught his hand, for the manly voice was smothered—"Jessie—O God—be thanked!

your brother is coming home to us."

"Wint theher-what father?" half-shricked the girl-

"Herman-coming?"

"He will be here to-morrow—think—think Jessie—Minerva, the noll girl!" His voice choked again—his breast heaved—he could say nothing more, but sat down quite overcome, his face hidden in his hands.

"O father! father!" and Jessie hid her face on his should be a solution joy-broken only by the stell "my bith r," and "my sm."

"Are yet a intract r him, father?" asked Jesie, litting her tear-stained face to his.

"Na durling - they will be to-morrow in a close carriage. Herman is, I is live"-his veice trembled again, "quite an invalid. We must be prepared to see a great change in him. Minerva says he has suffered terribly—my poor boy! Those proud Spaniards shall pay for it."

"They have gone home, father."

"Yes, but we can reach them. Now, how shall we tell your mother?"

"Father, I'll tell her," said Jessie.

"Very well, my durling—break it to her as gently as you can," and with a grateful heart he kissed the fair white forehead.

One can imagine the emotions of the little party gathered to welcome the wanderer home on that eventful morning. It proved a clear and beautiful day, and God was not forzotten for his glorious sunshine, for all his tender mercies. The pule lips of the invalid mother moved often as if in prayer. At nine o'clock, Sonor Abrates came over from the hotel, as a long a day had passed of late that he did not.

Oh! that sound of carriage-wheels! Jessie cannot endure the silence—she starts forward screaming that Herman is coming. But when she sees that pale being, lifted in the stalwart arms of his father-that white figure not at all like the brave, han beome brother who went away-she starts back, trambling and in tears. A joyful kiss was on the check-soft arms around her neck-it was the embrace of Minerva. For many minutes the sil-nee was something solemn and heart-breaking, but Herman laid his poor head upon his mother's breast, and felt stealing over him the old content of his boyhood. When words came, the confusion was appalling. Jessie hovered round the couch, ki-sing and caressing, while her father walked the room with glad and rapid heart-pulsings, praving au libby in thankfalmess for this unlooked-for bles in a Minerva knelt down by old Bruno, quite overcome at sight of him, for she had long thought him dead, and the fidth der ature gave a low whine of delight.

The provide but crestifillen Den Carles L. I return I to Carles, but before he went, to the extreme in light on of his gradien, he had made the pretty butterfly, Dora, his wife. The poor general never held up his head atterward—poor, for he was now improverished since he learned through the Son of Abrates that Minerva had been put in possession of knowledge.

sufficient to secure her fortune to her, and that the outh of al-Is ince taken by Senor Velasquez was not proof against the will vaporings of a distributed brain. Neither did his uncle dure take any steps to recover the lost heiress, who, in time, male them sufficiently aware that she "knew her rights, and knowing, would maintain." Herman persuaded his father to take no steps towards restitution, feeling fally repaid for his sull rings in the constancy of his charming betrothed. But the edays of a rrow had left and would leave for years, perhaps during lift, the traces of their terrible endurance. As for S nor Abraces, relieved of the responsibility of his sister's care, he had the the inflatore at Farmer Gorcham's, become a chart in and saw life through a far different medium than that of his recent past. Imperceptibly, sweet Jessie Gorehan was taking the place of his old love, and surely a purer, Lych rereture could not be found. He contemplated putting the ther the remnant of his fortune and buying out some god bisines in which Herman might be his helper.

In the great mansion of Don Carlos, Dora queens it. The Don is quite for left her, and though he is growing a desperate lever of places are, he allows hims If to be influenced somewhat by his leight, which little with. But the truest happing hes reigns in the horse half of the farmer where the pule son and his bound leight, make the home an Eden. Bandola Lander 1 it har mistres, and probably never will.

A mis relie of I man rises at cleven in his little old house I. The traitle Pas of in Havana. He is to be seen generally at the localism, this and repulsive-looking—arm in arm with a wither I little of I woman of some sixty years, walking slowly through sine retired street. The house and a pension for through sine retired street. The house and a pension for I had it him I beauty of Minerva, but the old general is both an interest of and antimated, and to this day becates his niece an read of and antimated and to this day becates his niece an read of and antimated and interest of an interest of a continuous distribution distribution of a continuous distribution of a continuous distrib

In time Minerval arm I what she had never known befor. Harfaher when enly nineteen, had love I a Cuban lady, —a Dana Marie St. Lanan. From all accounts, she was very good and lovely, and the young man had adored her. News came, however, while he was sojourning in England for a time, that she was filse to him, and following rapidly, the fact came out that she was married. In despair the young man first attempted his life, then thought better of it, and out of revenge married the first woman who would have him—the beautiful English girl, the mother of Minerva. When he arrived at home, he learned the truth of the matter—she had been sold, forced into marriage with a rich old Don. She would never see him till, her life fading away, she sent for him when she was dying. Her only child, the babe of a few months slept by her side.

It was an anguished meeting.

"We have been unhappily partel," she sail, "but I have a son and you a daughter! Promise me that if it is in your power, they two shall be unitel. Thus, through our children we may once more know a true and worthy love."

"I promise," he said.

Thus it came to pus that both children were reared unler, the roof of General Limenes de Monserate. The old Don was induced before he died (being also a friend of the general), to give the guardianship of his son into his hands, and the will of Minerva's father provided that if the two children, coming of age, murried, half the property was to go to General Limenes as a reward for his endeavors, but that if she marridary other man, he (the general) should forfeit all interest in the will. There need be no further explanation, of course the reader sees the result.

General Limenes de Monserate is living yet, and so are all the rest of my characters. Perhaps there are those who knew some of them in Saratoga.

THE END.

BEADLE'S DIME SPEAKERS -- Nos. 1 & 2.

As my and a to the Dime Diabeture embracist general orstory for the School, the exhibition-room, the home circle, and the study; and comprising specimens of wit. Lanor, putting, and discourse, from original and eminent sources. Compile I by Louis La GAND, M. D.

CONTENTS-No. 1 "Young America" on Progress. Tier British is well Western in. Plea for the Maine Law. Not on the Buttle-field. The Italian Struggle. Independence. Our Country. The Equality of Man. The True Character of the Revolution. The Fruits of the War. The Sewing Machine. True Manhood. The Mystery of Life. The Ups and Downs. The Truly Great. The Same. The Same. Early Retiring and Rising. Ari was War l's Oralisa. The Same. ---True Nationality. Our Natal Day. I . . . the Time Basis of Li-The state. The state Light Distant. A second second 1 - 11 - 1 The Product of the are sy-Annabel Lee. Washington's Name. The Sailor Boy's Syren. Jeriah Jeboom's Oration. A Duich Cure. Part Carried Land Production of the light. "I gallatte and " Attended

I THE STATE OF THE

CONTENTS-No. 2.

The Union and its Results. Our Country's Future The Statesman's Labors. True Immortality. Let the Childless Weep. Our Country's Greatest Glory. The Union a Household. Independence Bell. Tao Scholar's Dignity. The Called of Pregress. A Christmas Chant. Stability of Christianity. The True Higher Law. The One Great Need. The Ship and the Bird. Tecumseh's Speech to the Creek Warriors. Territorial Expansion. Martha Hopkins. The Bashful Man's Story. The Matter-of-Fact Man. Rich and Poor. Seeing the Eclipse. The Hate of Ille. The Creownin' Glory of the United States. T' rem Fools. W. 1-1. 11 1-17. Our Great Inheritance. Eulogium on Henry Clay. Ohio. Oliver Hazard Perry. Our Domain. Systems of Belief. The Indian Chief. The Independent Farmer. Mrs. Grammar's Ball. How the Money comes. The Future of the Fashions. Loyalty to Liberty our only Hope. One Construction, Less, and Almans. D. .: - 1 - 1 - 1 - 1 - 1 1) : :- tof J. :: -- n. Net of all Harman ar Barlar ma. Murder will out. Strive for the Best. Early Rising. Deeds of Kindness. Gates of Sleep. The Bugle. A Hoodish Gem.

BEADLE'S DIME DIALOGUES -- No. 1.

A repertory of colloquial cans, gathered from original and fresh sources, Wit, Palities, Humor, Sentiment. Designed for schools, exhibitions, and francies. By Louis Lasgand, M. D.

EXTRACTS FROM CONTENTS.

Murring or the Meses; or, the Contains of Plante Negli lande. It at Nine Young Ladies.

BAITING A LIVE ENGLISHMAN. For Three Boys. TASSO'S CORONATION. For Male and Female.

FASHION. For Two Ladies.

THE REHEARSAL. For Six Boys.

WHICH WILL YOU CHOOSE? For Two Boys. THE QUEEN OF MAY. For Two Little Girls.

THE TEA-PARTY. For Four Ladies.

There Serves in the Wadded Life of Mr. Bradley. For Mile and Female.

MRS. SNIFFLES' CONFESSION. For Male and Female.

THE MISSION OF THE SPIRITS. For Pive Young Lalles.

Hob-Nobbing. For Five Speakers.

THE SECRET OF SUCCESS. For Three Males and Two Females.

The Dasting of the Emphis Josephine. For lour Females and one Male.

THE FOLLY OF THE DUEL. For Two Boys. Dog-Matism. For Three Male Speakers.

BEADLE'S DIME DIALOGUES -- No. 2.

A report by of colloquial coms, gathered from original and fresh sagress. Wit, Pathos, Hamor, Scatiment. Designed for schools, exhibitions, and families. By Louis Legrand, M. D.

EXTRACTS FROM CONTENTS.

Tun Cinius of Liberty. A Stenie Collogny. For Two Males and one Female.

CENDERTIES; OR THE LITTIE GLASS SLIPPER. A Miner Draver.

THE SOCIETY FOR DOING GOOD AND SATING BAD. A Satirial Dial grad. For Several Characters.

THE COLDEN RULE. A D. Corrector Two Males and Two Foundes.

THE GIFT OF THE PAIRY QUEEN. A Special clark Relation. For Several

TAKEN IN AND DONG FOR. A COM-1-321. For Two Course tes.

THE COUNTRY AUNT'S VISIT TO THE CITY. A Dramatic Passage. For Several Characters.

THE TWO ROMANS. A CHAPTY. FOR TWO M 1 4.

TRYING THE CHARACTERS. A Burk U.A. For Three Miles.

THE HAPPY PAMELY. A CARLATURE. For Several "Animals."

THE RAINERW. A DESCRIPTION FOR S YOU CO. THE PER-

How to Whith " Popular Stokins, A Pares, For Two Males,

THE NEW AND THE OLD. For Two Males.

A SENSATION AT LAST. For Two Males.

THE GREENHORN. For Two Males.

THE THREE MEN OF SCIENCE. For Four Males.

THE OLD LADY'S WILL. For Four Males.

THE TWO PHILOSOPHERS. A POST Collegia. For Two Perishes.

A Novelty for the Ladies!

BEADLE'S

DIME DRESS-MAKER AND MILLINER'S GUIDE.

The singular and often-expressed want of a text-book on

Dress-Making, Millinery, Cloak and Mantilla Making, Embroideries and Laces, Flowers, &c.,

Induced the publishers of the Dime Hand and Text-Books to engage that eminent writer and authority on the subject,

MADAME PULLAN,

To prepare the needed and necessary work. They now have the pleasure of announcing its publication, and offer it to the public as the most admirable and satisfactory hand-book on the subject ever prepared. It is

Original! New! Unique! Exhaustive!!

EMBRACING CHAPTERS ON

THE CORSAGE, WAIST, OR BODY;

THE SLEEVES, MOURNING, RIBBONS,
NEGLIGEE TOILET, TRAVELING TOILET, BONNETS, CLOAK-MAKING, PATTERNS FOR CUTTING DRESSES, WORK MATERIALS AND IMPLEMENTS,

PURCHASE OF MATERIALS—SILKS, &c., DICTIONARY OF MILLINERY AND DRESS-MAKING,
TECHNICAL TERMS IN DRESS-MAKING AND MILLINERY

FLOWERS, Erc., CORBIELLE DE MARIAGE.

Every Dress-Maker Should Have It!

EVERY MILLINER SHOULD HAVE IT!

EVERY WIFE SHOULD HAVE IT!

EVERY MOTHER SHOULD HAVE IT!

EVERY HOUSE SHOULD HAVE IT!

Ten Cents. Copies sent by mail, Post-PAID, to any address, on receipt of All News Dealers have it.

BEADLE AND COMPANY, Publishers, 141 William Street, New York.

BEADLE'S DINE BOOKS!

FOR THE MILLION!

BEADLE'S DIME SCHOOL MELODIST, BEADLE'S DIME LETTER-WRITER,
BEADLE'S DIME GOOK-BOOK,
BEADLE'S DIME RECIPE-BOOK,
BEADLE'S DIME DIALOGUES NO. 1,
BEADLE'S DIME DIALOGUES NO. 2,
BEADLE'S DIME SPEAKER NO. 2,

BEADLE'S DIME BOOK OF ETIQUETTE, BEADLE'S DIME DRESS-MAKER,
BEADLE'S DIME MELODIST, BEADLE'S DIME BOOK OF DREAMS,
BEADLE'S DIME GHESS INSTRUCTOR,
BEADLE'S DIME BOOK OF GRICKET, BEADLE'S DIME BASE-BALL PLAYER,
BEADLE'S DIME GUIDE TO SWIMMING

Beadle's Dime Song Book No. 2, Beadle's Dime Song Book No. 2, Beadle's Dime Song Book No. 3, Beadle's Dime Song Book No. 4, Beadle's Dime Song Book No. 5, Beadle's Dime Song Book No. 6,

BEADLE'S DIME SONG BOOK NO. 7.

BEADLE'S DIME BOOK OF FUN No. 1, BEADLE'S DIME BOOK OF FUN No. 2,

BEADLE'S DIME NOVELS.

A Dollar Book for a Dime!

Each volume contains One Hundred and Twenty-Eight large 12mo. pages of letter-press, printed with clear and expressly-prepared type and book-paper, and bound in heavy paper covers of bright salmon color—making a volume of much beauty, and delightful to read. The volumes will be issued semi-monthly, in regular succession.

Dime Novels Now Ready:

NO. 1.-MALAESKA: THE INDIAN WIFE OF THE WHITE MUNTER

No. 2.—THE PRIVATEER'S CRUISE, AND THE BRIDE OF POMFRET HALL

No. 3.-MYRA: THE CHILD OF ADOPTION.

No. 4.—ALICE WILDE: THE RAFTSMAN'S DAUGHTER.

No. 5.—THE GOLDEN BELT; OR, THE CARIB'S PLEDGE.

No. 6 .- CHIP: THE CAVE CHIED.

No. 7.—THE REEFER OF '76; OR, THE CRUISE OF THE FIRE-FLY.

No. S.—SETH JONES OF NEW HAMPSHIRE; OR, THE CAPTIVES OF THE FRONTIER.

No. 9.—THE SLAVE SCULPTOR; OR, THE PROPHETESS OF THE SECRET

No. 10.—THE BACKWOODS' BRIDE: A ROMANCE OF SQUATTER LIFE.
NO. 11.—THE PRISONER OF LA VINTRESSE; OR, THE FORTUNES OF A CUBAN HEIRESS.

THE PRISE

BEAL NEW YORK: 118 WIL. American Ne

